Racist behaviour shouldn't be tolerated: B'Nai Brith

White supremacist rally 'morally repugnant'

by MARTHA PERKINS
Staff Reporter

The community should make it very clear that anti-Semitic and racist behaviour among its citizens cannot be tolerated, says a spokesperson for B'Nai Brith's League of Human Rights in response to reports that a neo-Nazi, white supremacist rally will be held near Minden on the long weekend.

Last Friday, the Toronto Sun reported that John Beattie, the former leader of the Canadian Nazi Party, will stage a rally at his Bobcaygeon Road home. Flyers with his address on them advertise a "whites only" Save Our Canada Day rally on July 1. The Sun says the Nationalist Party of Canada "confirmed Beattie and other skinhead groups from Ottawa and Montreal are the organizers."

"My suggestion is to build a public sentiment which says this is unacceptable in our community and we find it morally repugnant," says Lorne Shipman, the league's project co-ordinator. B'Nai Brith is a Jewish organization working for many Canadian sectors to fight racism through education.

He encourages people to speak out against the rally and the sentiments behind it. Otherwise, "the community will be used as a way to indoctrinate young people to a racist ideology—to teach them to hate others."

Activities noted

B'Nai Brith first started watching Beattie's actions in 1965, when the young, self-styled Hitler began organizing rallies. In the next few years, his actions made him well known. One of his themes was that the bodies found buried in mass graves near concentration camp were Germans killed in air raids. The Jews dumped them there, he said, as propaganda against the Nazis. At a gathering at Allan Gardens, he and his followers were attacked. In later demonstrations he was knocked unconscious and arrested.

One newspaper account of a court case for unlawful assembly says "he said it would be good for the Nazi movement if he was beaten up or murdered at a Nazi rally." Other newspapers call him the most despised man in the country.

In 1969, his name hit the headlines again for tapping a telephone message which told everyone to work with the police to fight against crime. A column by Ron Haggart in 1969 quotes the tape as saying "Whitey, what will you do when Negroes allowing themselves to be manipulated by Communists and Jews—one and the same tribe—come burning to your door?"

Pierre Trudeau was the next to be attacked for his pro-French stance.

In 1971, the Social Credit party didn't know what to do when he showed up at a convention. The next year, The Toronto Star had a story about the OPP in Sault Ste. Marie paying Beattie $15 a week to inform on ultra-right groups. The story says "he

Lutterworth residents want individual tax bills

by SUSAN GROBER
Staff Reporter

More than 25 residents of Hunter Creek Estates filled the Lutterworth council chambers at last Thursday's meeting to submit a petition against council's decision to stop providing them with individual tax bills.

William Bailey and Muriel Mark approached council to represent residents of Hunter Creek Estates (formerly Lutterworth Estates) and submitted a petition with 109 signatures. For the past two and a half years, the municipality has been experimenting by issuing each tenant a tax bill. Previously it was the responsibility of the development's owners, and Lutterworth decided to give that responsibility back.

The residents are unhappy because they will end up paying extra through an increase in their maintenance costs. Bailey told council that in a letter he received relating to the original agreement about the individual tax bills between the development and the municipality, "it made no mention that it was a temporary agreement. We should have been notified. We were never made aware that it was only supposed to be temporary."

It had been costing the municipality $1,000 to prepare the 72 individual tax bills over a two-week period, so council decided to no longer provide this service.

In May, Bill Payne, manager of Mill Creek Properties which recently purchased the development, came to council to protest this decision. He was told that the company would now be responsible for providing the service by hiring a private company to prepare individual tax bill, or to get the mill-rate information and have the bills typed up in their own office.

Residents of the adult community park pay privately for road maintenance, snow plowing and garbage pickup, and don't require use of the school system and busing.

Payne told council he wanted to speak on behalf of his tenants, and argued that they pay the highest amount of tax money in the township for the least number of services. Bailey echoed this statement at last week's meeting.

"We pay a lot of taxes," he said. "We own and are assessed on our houses, and we also pay taxes on the land."

Councillor Lisa Mercer explained that tax bills are only issued to property owners, and that residents of Hunter Creek Estates are only considered tenants.

"I think we're quibbling over a very small issue here," Mrs. Mark said, and reminded council that the service was provided for two years and that to take it away was "unfair."

Bailey then argued that many of the Hunter Creek Estates tenants are on fixed incomes and said they are being burdened now that they will have to pay extra to the owners of Mill Creek Properties.

"I'm sure they're very honorable people, and I'm sure what they charge us will be fair, but it could be a lot," said Bailey.

"We're paying the same mill rate as the rest of the community. Why shouldn't we be able to get the tax bills? We're not here to beat a dead horse. We're here to be treated fairly. A lot of people are upset."

Councillor Bill Valentine then interrupted to speak up in favour of the residents, who broke out into applause. "It's very obvious what we should do. Whether it costs us $1,000 or $5,000, why should we stop? We're here to serve the people. If those people want their tax bills, they should get them. I feel it's a service we should provide."

Council may reconsider its position on the tax bills.

Cottagers' support sought

by MARTHA PERKINS
Staff Reporter

Stanhope council will ask for seasonal residents' support in its bid to change one of the guidelines in the Ministry of Municipal Affairs' new county government report.

Last month, the ministry released its Report of the Consultation Committee on County Government. It suggests each municipality have no less than 4,000 permanent residents. This is to make administration more economical and some county councils less unwieldy. (There are 17 Haliburton County councillors while others have more than 40 members.)

In Haliburton County, it's estimated that the 11,000 full-time population swells to 36,000 when the cottagers arrive in the summer, and this number should be taken into consideration, Stanhope council believes. If so, Stanhope, with a permanent population of 984, could use its 3,500 ratepayers to avoid amalgamation.

"We could be devoured by our neighbouring municipalities," said resident Alex Stevenson, who presented a brief against the plan to council. "At that point, I move," responded councillor Eleanor Harrison, to which deputy reeve Ann Barker added "or we put the barricades up."

One of the reasons why council wants to avoid amalgamation is financial. Its budget is in the black while both Anson, Hindon and Minden and Dysart et al have debentures to pay for costs. Councillors believe amalgamation would cause taxes to rise and on this point, they think they have a rallying cry for all taxpayers.

Highlands gets ready to let fling

by ANNE HEWITT
Staff Reporter

With only three days left, members of the Haliburton County Highland Games committee are busy with the final preparations for the event.

Work crews have been out each night this week, clearing the field at Glebe Park of stones, setting up the tents and concessions, and making sure everything is ready to go on Saturday, when the games are officially declared open.

Committee chairperson, Joan Irish, says everything will be "ready to roll by Friday afternoon", and she is confident the games will be a success.

"There are always a few last minute things to do," she says. "But everything is going beautifully. I'm hoping for 5,000 people, but if I have to settle for 3,000 I will. This is the first Highland Games in the area and I think the people of Haliburton are proud of what's been done."

A free shuttle bus will be running from town to the site every 20 minutes. By parking your car in Haliburton and taking the bus to the games, traffic congestion will be cut down in the park, making it easier to get around.

The festivities begin at 8:30 a.m. on Saturday with individual pipe and dancing competitions. At 12:30 p.m. the opening ceremonies will get underway, along with a massed band and massed fling. The closing ceremonies are at 5:00 p.m., with another massed band. Programs are available in the park for $2.

So far the committee has confirmed four Grade 1 bands, including the 78th Fraser Highlanders, the top ranked band in the world two years ago. More than 120 dancers have signed up for the various dancing competitions.

Off-duty policemen will be present at the park to handle any difficulties. There is no charge for children under 12, and the cost for adults is $5.

HCSA ends year with big surplus

by ANNE HEWITT
Staff Reporter

The Haliburton County Snowmobile Association retained its title of world's largest snowmobile club and increased revenues at the same time, president Peter Overington said at Saturday night's annual meeting.

The financial statement for the year ending April 30, 1989 shows a surplus of $6,335, as opposed to last year's $246 deficit. Revenue increased by more than $40,000 with the largest increase coming from the general and business memberships, and fundraising activities.

"Our fundraising efforts were not significant except our Kitty Cat draw," said Overington. "This machine was donated to us by Kushog Lake Marine and Easter Marketing and we were able to make over $2,460."

Membership Chairman, Norm Gemmell stressed the importance of maintaining membership in his report. Membership has increased from 722 in 1980 to 2595 full members and 345 temporary members now. This area is in direct competition with snowmobiling areas in the United States, particularly Michigan, and the club had to make sure American snowmobilers came here, he said.

Costs were also up by approximately $40,000. Increases were seen in payments to the Ontario Federation of Snowmobiles, and the cost of the maintenance on the groomers. Wages were down slightly.

An increase in the number of people using the trails led to the purchase of two new grooming machines, and several of the older groomers will need to be replaced in the near future.

"Our BR100s (a small grooming machine) are nearing the end of their useful life. Naturally as they get older maintenance costs spiral and in spite of the fact that we have bought two BR60s we are going to have to find a way to replace at least three of the BR100s," said Overington. "Last season was particularly difficult for our operators, several of them were new and we had resignations which left us short-handed. In addition, ice on the trails was worse than we have ever seen it and we ended up having to equip all machines with electric winches."

The executive discussed the bulldozing plan which Overington says members contributed to significantly.

"From this effort, sprang one of the most significant initiatives we have undertaken. With the generous help of the PineStone Inn we held a meeting for businesses at which we announced the concept of a loop or double wide trail which would basically run around the edge of our territory," said Overington. "Twelve businesses have already paid their levy and assessment notices have been sent to most others in the county." Approximately 214 businesses, or two-thirds of the businesses in the county have been invoiced.

An amendment to the constitution was made to allow 17 to 26 people to be directors. Three new directors were elected at the meeting. Larry Tupling, Jeff Martin, and Ralph Tarswell will bring the number of directors to 23 this year.

No dump fees in Lutterworth

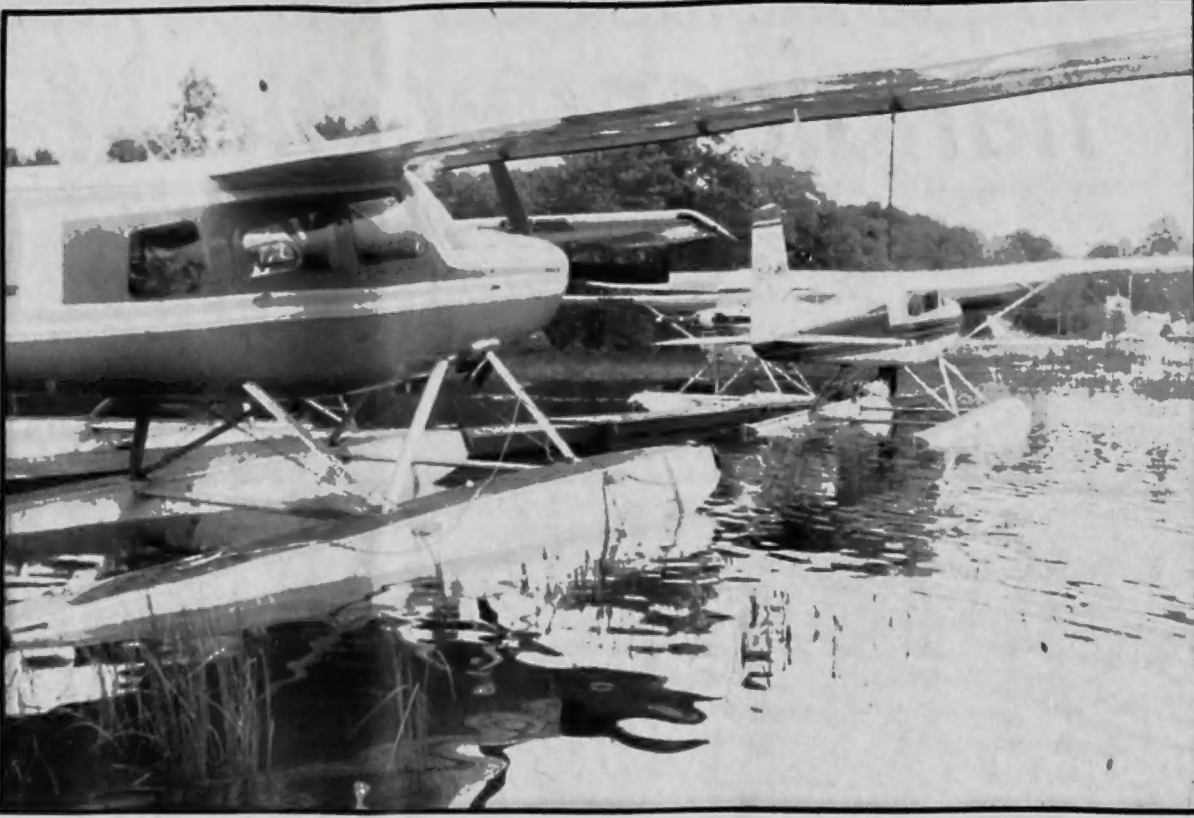

by SUSAN GROBER
Staff Reporter

Residents of Lutterworth township won't have to worry about paying fees for dumping garbage at the municipality's three landfill sites.

Roads superintendent Kevin Hill told council at last week's meeting that he could look into charging money from people who dump trucks or trailers full of garbage into the dump. He said other areas have fees and asked council members for their input on the idea.

Councillor Lisa Mercer disagreed with charging people, and said it would be too much of a nuisance for the landfill site attendants to bother with handling the money. "We have some say in how their municipality is run," said reeve Harry Davis. "We should be stirring up interest and participation by all cottage associations."

Councils have until July 14 to respond to the report and last week, county council set up a steering committee to formulate suggestions and complaints.

"I think the input from each one of us is going to have as much weight," Davis told his fellow

Lutterworth won't pay for signs

Someone will have to pay for four new speed limit signs to replace those removed from the lower Gull River so the police can control speeding, but it won't be Lutterworth council.

The township's council received a letter from OPP constable Mike Maybee at last week's meeting which said police can't enforce the 60 km speed limit if there are no signs.

Council agreed there are speeding problems in the area, but didn't want to pay the $81.50 to replace each Stanhope councillors.

Stevenson would like to add his voice to the review as well and has prepared a report to send to the ministry.

He says that of the 40 recommendations made by the committee, 22 of them "deal with the nature of local municipalities... in the creation of a stronger county government."

"There are suggestions that because Dysart and AHM have a lower property tax than Stanhope, property owners would benefit from sign. Councillor Bill Valentine made the point that the signs would probably just get stolen again. "We'll put them up, and they'll just end up on someone's rec room wall."

Members of the Moore Lake Cottagers' Association will be contacted regarding the signs, and asked if they are willing to pay for replacements.

Fun Day beer sales raise some concerns

by MARTHA PERKINS
Staff Reporter

The debate on whether to have an outdoor beer garden at Stanhope's Fun Day strayed from the image this would present to concerns over damage to the multi-purpose pad.

This year, the Stanhope Fire Department asked for permission to sell beer outdoors during the family-oriented community event. Liquor Control Board rules state a beer garden must be fenced and to cut down on costs, the fenced multi-purpose sport pad was suggested. In previous years, beer was only sold in the basement of the community centre.

"Our Fun Day has always been a family affair. It's not that I don't like a beer, but it's not part of the image I see we're trying to present," said councillor Fred Gardner, who cast the only dissenting vote.

"In this day and age, the children know full well (about alcohol) and there's no sense trying to hold it in secret," said councillor Murray Daniels.

"I think the firemen deserve to be given a chance to try it on a one shot deal," said reeve Harry Davis.

Then John Barclay, the former chairperson of the recreation committee, asked "If it's really hot will the chairs and tables sink in" and mark the surface?

After a discussion, council decided to refer the matter to the Fun Day committee. It decided to leave the decision up to the firemen on Fun Day. Picnic tables will be used and it's considering covering the surface with plywood.

Mentally handicapped must demand rights

by MARTHA PERKINS

Staff Reporter

OBESITY. Of all the things David Hingsburger liked to counsel his clients on, this was the behaviour therapist's least favourite. It was, after all, a bit like the pot telling the kettle to stop being black.

Easing his rather portly figure into his rather small car, Dr. Hingsburger motioned the young girl to squeeze into the seat next to him. With nary the space for a briefcase to fit between them, they made their way to the diet clinic.

Several weeks later, the girl was gaining weight. Obviously Plan One had failed and it was time to try a different tack—self-image.

"Tell me something good about yourself," Dr. Hingsburger asked her as they were driving to McDonald's for a diet Coke.

"I'm clean," she replied. "No, no," he said, "tell me something about how you feel deep inside."

It was when she came up with "When I do everything properly I get a treat" that Dr. Hingsburger realized "everything she said was a compliance statement. She feels she's a good human being because she followed the rules. We've created a system where people comply to our demands. Someone has a poor self-image and what do we teach? Table setting."

You see, this young woman was mentally handicapped and the practice had been to reward good behaviour—setting the table with everything in its right place, making her bed, handing a note to her teacher—with a treat. Her feeling of self worth was derived from other people's approval of learning her lessons well. Little wonder she was fat and unhappy.

A few years later, a much more confident young woman had graduated from all of her programs. "What do you want to do now," Dr. Hingsburger asked her. "I want to help people like you do," she replied. So, ego bursting from his generous seams, Dr. Hingsburger found her a job volunteering at a nursing home.

The problem was, she was so good at what she did the rest of the staff got angry; they felt de-valued. Unless she followed these rules, they demanded, she'd be fired: She must wear a badge saying "Retarded volunteer"; she must take her coffee break 15 minutes before everyone else; she must be finished lunch and out of the cafeteria before everyone else arrived; she cannot talk to the other staff members.

Apart from sniping about the "bigots", Dr. Hingsburger could do nothing else than tell her she must leave her job. She made him tell her why. While he wouldn't demean her by asking her to comply with these rules, she surprised him by saying "I'm going back to work, that's my job."

Except for changing her badge to read "Volunteer" only, all the rules were followed. A few weeks later, brimming with excitement, she ran up to Dr. Hingsburger. "Guess what happened to me today," she asked him. "One of the nurses said good morning to me."

Something was changing at that nursing home and Dr. Hingsburger knew who was behind the change. It wasn't him or the other specialists who give speeches, it wasn't the people who advocate for the rights of the mentally and physically challenged. It was a young woman named Sue.

The courage to be a person

"I understood something here about the Messiah—the Messiah who comes from within," Dr. Hingsburger told his audience at the PineStone Inn last Friday morning. "I was meeting someone who had the courage to lead. My role was to tell her 'You are equal to the task; you are second to known; you are to live life as if living makes a difference.'"

"It's like the story of the Jewish rabbi who dies and goes to heaven but wants to see what hell is like. He's shown two doors, one marked Heaven, the other Hell. He opens the door to Hell and sees hundreds of thin and emaciated people sitting around a huge table. There's a pot of stew in the middle of the table and the whole room smells delicious.

"But in order to get to it, they only had these big long spoons and they were slopping it all over themselves. Next door in heaven, the setting was exactly the same but everyone looked happy and well fed. The difference was they were feeding each other."

"It's how we approach things (which determines the outcome of events.) Sue saw heaven where I could only see hell. That nursing home stood on an acre of land and (thanks to Sue's courage), there's an acre of this country of mine that's a little more free."

It was stories such as these which made "A Morning with David Hingsburger" so enjoyable and informative for the 40 or so people gathered in the conference room. The meeting was sponsored by the Haliburton County Advocacy Resource Group as a way of helping the community understand how it can respond to people with special needs who are now leaving institutions and playing an active role in community life.

"We need to question the system," says Dr. David Hingsburger, who spoke at a meeting sponsored by the Haliburton County Advocacy Resource Group last week.

A battle we all fight

The last story he told illustrates another theme from his two-hour speech. If we are to endow individuals with their rights, we must first know the history of the struggle and what it has foretold.

"We have to understand we're not the only ones who have fought the battle. Integration is an issue of all minorities," Dr. Hingsburger told various representatives from local service agencies, such as the Haliburton District Association for the Mentally Retarded. (Dr. Hingsburger avoided using that "r" word.

For instance, he showed a book about normalization to a specialist who was black. His reaction was "this is a book which only could have been written by a white." When asked to explain his comment, he said "education doesn't change the world. The world changes when they understand they have rights."

Blacks were told to wait for their emancipation, that whites would set them free. After centuries of waiting, they took things into their own hands. "They had to talk to one another about 'I am equal.'"

Women would still be waiting for the vote if they had allowed the male legislators to decide when women's suffrage would become an issue. "Women had to say 'I believe I have a right to make a decision on how this country is run.'"

"Liberation begins when people see themselves as worthy."

But what's the history of the mentally disabled's struggle. Dr. Hingsburger had to be told years after he graduated from a school which told him all about syndromes but nothing about "people and who they are."

Did you know, he asked, that Nazi doctors developed a tracking system of anyone who was different by studying what was done in North America? Everyone knows about the millions of Jews who were killed, but little is heard about the first to become part of "the final solution."

A menacing black bus

Three mentally handicapped people were looking out the window of their institution when they happened to notice a big black bus pulling up. It always came back empty. And it wasn't like the tour buses they sometimes took, because choice of who got on the bus was indiscriminate—they just took whoever was closest to the door.

Every time the bus came, these three would hide. Eventually, there was no one left in the institution and they hid in a nearby wood for the duration of the war. They might be the only three mentally handicapped survivors in Nazi Germany.

Same war different country: With no male labourers, a munitions company in New York had to call upon the services of 24 women from an institution for the mentally handicapped. Trained at mundane jobs, they nonetheless found their niche and were very happy. After the war, they remained employed at factory, leaders of what we thought was a recent phenomenon.

Community should speak out against rally

has publicly renounced his Nazi leanings and wants to get back into the mainstream of Canadian life but the OPP 'won't let me.'"

In 1975, a reporter visited Beattie at his Beaches' home in Toronto. The Union Jack was prominently displayed as well as a bust of Sir John A. Macdonald who Beattie said was "my ideal now. I won't be a fascist or a racist. But the Anglos are becoming a minority in their own country." A member of the Progressive Conservative Party, he refers to his past as "that madness". A new phone message has him saying "we are fed up with the wails and moans of various new Canadians."

Then, in the early 1980s, B'Nai Brith's Shipman says Beattie linked up with John Ross Taylor, who now has a case being heard by the Supreme Court of Canada. He is accused of using the telephone to spread hate messages. Together they formed "a pseudo pro-British association which is basically pro-white and anti-immigration," says Shipman. Beattie has been linked to the British People's League since as early as 1971 and his Minden post office box is registered under that name.

In the background

Shipman says B'Nai Brith has not heard much about Beattie in the last five years—until the Sun brought them a flyer with Beattie's name on it. Because it came on the heels of anti-Semitic vandalism in Toronto—Shipman says some of the words spray painted on the walls of a prominent synagogue are not known by most people and suggest some organized group is behind it—"this really made the bells go off in our heads."

Since the rally became public, Beattie has been denying it's anything but a small get-together at his house. He says someone in Toronto is playing a trick on him by linking him with the flyer which says chartered buses will be used to bring pre-registered, predominantly "skinhead" guests to his home. "No gate crashers will get in—not in one piece anyway." "Skinheads" refer to gangs which are more prevalent—and violent—in Britain and the United States, says Shipman. Recognized by their shaved heads, high-cut black boots and Nazi insignia, Shipman says "the vast majority are just people who cut their hair short but there is a minority within which has either voluntarily adopted the neo-Nazi ideology or have been recruited to join in."

In a television interview on Friday, Beattie admitted his July 1 guests will be skinheads but they were up last year and caused no problem. When the Echo phoned Beattie on Saturday morning and identified itself, his wife, Grace, hung up the phone. "We're not sure of the validity (of linking Beattie personally with the posters)," says Shipman. But if Beattie's not behind it, "someone has gone to a lot of trouble to embarrass someone who hasn't been active in the past five years." As well, the flyer tells interested people to send money to Box 1004 Minden—Beattie's address. "If someone wanted to embarrass him, it's funny they'd be sending him money."

Shipman believes that whoever shows up, the gathering "won't be conducive to our multi-cultural society. They're not talking about the weather." Local people haven't known just quite how to react—besides being outraged. Do you picket the house or stay as far away as possible? In small towns, where people know where each other lives, there's a fear to speak out since skinheads represent violent behaviour.

Some residents are channelling their reaction into a positive message of the "respect and love in which we hold each other and all people everywhere." (Apparently, one Toronto paper has called Minden a white supremacist community.) A poster has been made with a picture of hands reaching across the globe. It says "Canada: A member of the global community. All people are welcome in Haliburton County."

"If the whole community comes out against Beattie, there's some safety in numbers," says Shipman, who adds most skinhead violence has been against other skinheads or rival gang members.

Shipman adds "it's only when people stayed silent (hated and racism) were allowed to grow. If everyone stands together, then the movement has much more trouble gaining momentum."

"What we're seeing in some ways is a re-birth" of that hatred, he says. B'Nai Brith keeps a record of anti-Semitic incidents. From 1985 to 1987, there was a decline in incidences; in 1988, there was a doubling, the second highest total since 1982, when records were first kept.

But unlike other years, when publicity such as the Ernst Zundel case heralded an onslaught of attacks, Shipman can find nothing to link this recent outbreak to. Teenagers seem to be "searching for a cause, whether it's really a misguided one or not, it seems to be something to hang their hat on or shave their head for."

Police aware of rally

Acting Staff-Sergeant Steve Adam of the Minden OPP says the police's hands are tied when it comes to prevent the rally, no matter what its size.

"We can do little or nothing if it's a private party on private property. We can't go into the meeting to find out what's going on. It's only when you take action on those (racist) beliefs we can do anything."

If a law is broken, we will investigate."

Only if it was a public meeting could the police get involved and determining what's public treads a very fine line. For example, if you were outside next door and heard what was being said, even if it was inciting hate, you could not press charges. "There has to be intent."

The flyer suggests the rally was not supposed to become public knowledge, Staff Sgt. Adam says. "It surprised me with the amount of organization and networking of people involved to get the information disseminated."

When asked what people who are against such acts could do, Staff-Sgt. Adam said "I don't know what people can do. Obviously the majority of people don't believe in what he does but he's entitled to his beliefs whether we agree with them or not."

A low profile

Beattie is married with three children who are taught at home. They seem to have a "back to the land" lifestyle—no car nor television.

Neighbour Larry Kent says that when the Beatties arrived two years ago, "I thought they were fitting right into the community." If Beattie had some skinhead friends visiting last July 1 weekend, "I don't recall anything unusual. Certainly no great throng of people there. But if he's involved with what they say he's involved in, I certainly don't agree with his beliefs."

Anson, Hindon and Minden reeve Ray Moore is a bit upset over how Global television handled its 20-minute interview with him. When the reporter asked him if he often have these kinds of events happening here, Moore replied that because there are not many non-whites living here, racial tension is not a problem like it is in the city. However, his quote came out sounding like he said the rally wouldn't be a problem because there weren't many blacks here to get concerned.

"It's a media event," an obviously frustrated Moore says of his impression of how the story's been handled. "I'm getting calls from different people who are concerned and want me to do something. What can I do? The man is on private property and the police can't do something unless he breaks a law."

Minden Legion Branch 636 has had Beattie's membership under review since the first of the month. He transferred his membership here from the branch in Bobcaygeon, where he was barred for a year after getting into a fight.

Stanhope decides on dump hours

by ANNE HEWITT

Staff Reporter

Stanhope Council has decided on the new dump hours, but they are having a hard time finding someone to work them.

The two dumps, on Maple and Halls Lakes, will be open five days a week, totalling 32 hours. They will be closed Tuesday and Thursday, and open noon to 6 p.m. Monday, Wednesday, Friday and Sunday. The hours will be extended to 10 to 6 on Saturday to accommodate people doing yard work on the weekend.

However, now that the hours have been established, the council is having difficulty finding a landfill site attendant. So far only one person has been hired, and Clerk-Administrator Gerald Bain is hoping to locate a second employee by the end of the week.

Both dumps will be equipped with the large blue bins from Norm's Garbage Disposal, for after-hours disposal. Between June and the end of September the bins will be emptied twice a week. It will cost $22 to empty the bin at the Maple Lake dump, and $34 for the Halls Lake bin.

The cost to have the bins emptied for a year will be approximately $3,800, but council budgeted only $2,000. Some of the money saved on fencing the dumps will be transferred to disposal, to cover the difference.

No cost for dumping would have to have a cash float at the dumps for the money. Next thing you know, dump attendants will be getting robbed," she joked.

"We shouldn't put the added burden on (the landfill site attendants)," she added. "The guys can't go around chasing people to get money out of them saying, 'Yes, you owe me $10.' Why should they be the heavies?"

Councillor Bill Valentine said the small amount of money collected wouldn't be worth the trouble. "For two bucks you're going to have an unhappy taxpayer. And what the heck is two bucks?"

Council decided against imposing a fee, noting that changes to the landfill sites will be in the works anyway as the county is starting work on an Environmental Waste Management Master Plan.

Vaughans prepare to say goodbye to Haliburton

by MARTHA PERKINS
Staff Reporter

REBECA VAUGHAN has this whole moving business in proper perspective. "One good thing about our new home in Newmarket is there's not going to be any blackflies," says the insightful seven year old. But before you think she's really happy that her family—parents Rick and Nada, and sisters Amy and Sarah—is moving away from Haliburton at the end of this month, listen to a few of her observations of why she's been so content living the first seven years of her life here.

"I think it's a very pretty place. I've never seen a better place than Haliburton. We don't have wars." At this point Mother has to admonish the giggling older sisters. Rebecca's used to this however, and ignoring them, continues to make her point. "When we go to some places they have garbage all over the street. I'm going to miss my next-door-neighbour, Jennifer. She's six and when you're six you have a good imagination. I suppose I had one too when I was six."

Yes, little Rebecca has grown up a lot in her home town. So too has the rest of her family, which is why they're finding it so difficult to say goodbye to the people they've grown with.

"Once you live here for a while, you'll never want to leave," 12-year-old Sarah says, before she remembers they are leaving so her father can attend the Ontario Theological Seminary at the north end of Toronto. That thought just slipped out, because she and her family are trying to think the best of this move. "It's a challenge," Sarah adds more optimistically.

"I've had a lot of weepy times already," admits her mother, who, in one of those truisms of moving, cried when she got here and is now crying because she has to leave.

Goodbye city, hello isolation?

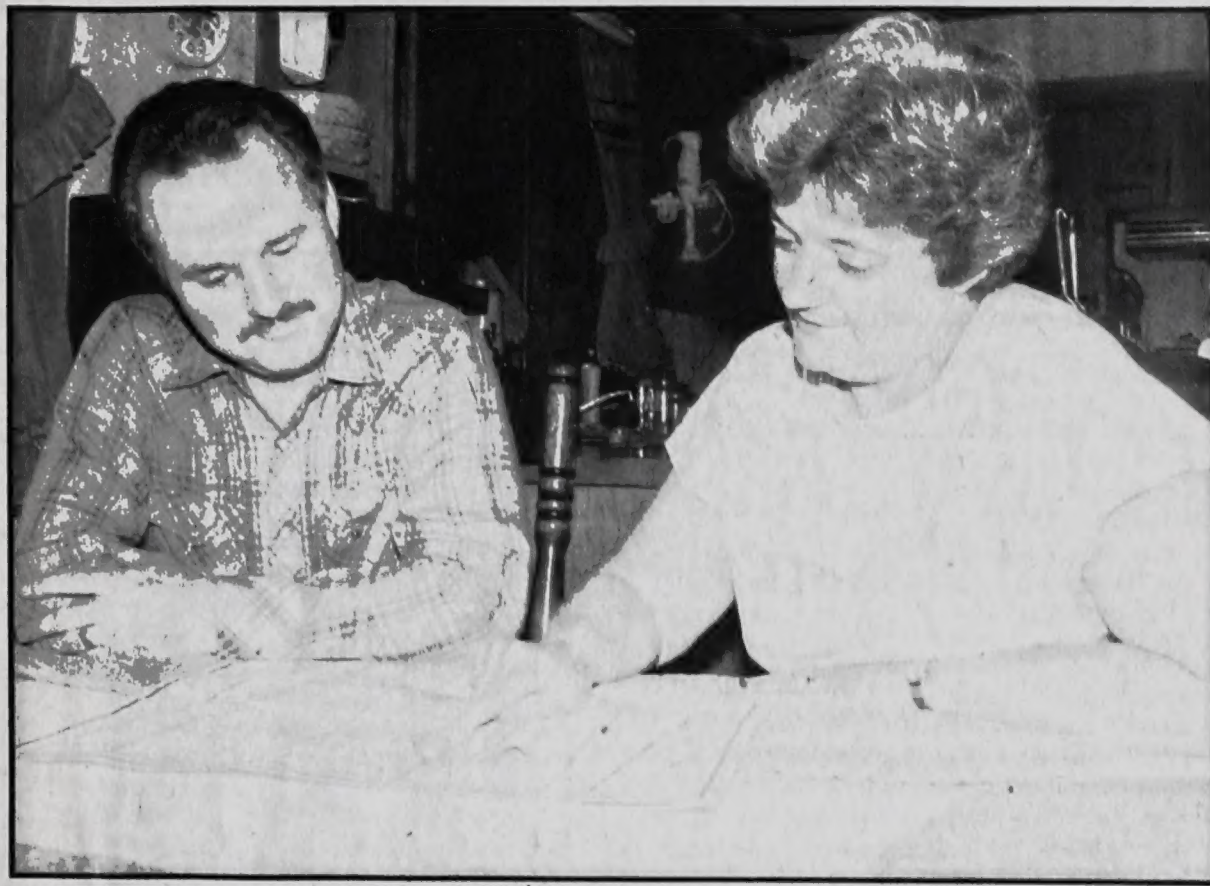

Ten years to the day they are moving, the Vaughans arrived in Haliburton (without Rebecca who hadn't been born yet.) On June 30, 1979, they left their city lives behind and moved to this funny, albeit beautiful, little village.

"I spent a lot of that first summer crying," Mrs. Vaughan says, laughing at herself now. "What would we do? Would I make any friends? Rick and I were born and raised in Toronto and though we had lived in Jarvis for a year, it was small but not as isolated. Haliburton seemed so far from anywhere else."

"We arrived in peak tourist time, with everyone on the streets, and we just thought it was always like this. Come September we said 'Where has everyone gone?'"

Yet it wasn't long before they got the sense that this small town living wasn't all that bad. And one of the first signs happened in a place which was going to change their lives forever—and precipitate the move 10 years later.

"Before we moved here," Mrs. Vaughan explains, "we both went to church but it had never been an important part of our lives. That first Sunday (at Haliburton United Church) we saw something different about the people. We saw the love they had for each other. People really cared we were there."

In part, it was that caring which opened doors to the Vaughans. Their faith grew, so much so that Mr. Vaughan began to think it wasn't music he was supposed to be teaching. It all came to a head this September, when on the first day of school, he realized his sense of being called to the church was overpowering the satisfaction he once felt as a music teacher.

"Probably it was just the growth in my Christian faith," he says, attributing that to the move to Haliburton. "It was part of God's plan we be here and grow as much as we did. If one is going to grow in faith, you need a trusting, loving fellowship to be part of. Christianity is not a solitary religion; fellowship gives you the opportunity to move out in faith."

Mrs. Vaughan, while as committed to the church and aware of her husband's struggle, wasn't sure she liked the way things were going. "I didn't approach him about it because I knew it would mean leaving Haliburton and I didn't want to do that. As time went on, I realized it was God's will that we move. Everything would be fine."

The girls thought their parents were joking when they were told of the move. To them, Haliburton was home, friends and a sense of wellbeing.

"I like small towns because the people are closer and you get to know people," says Amy, who was three years old when the Vaughans moved here. "You walk down the main street and everyone says hi. When someone moves here, you try to get to know them." Will the people of Newmarket do the same for them?

It might be tough going for the first little while, they admit. But they're used to tough times, although Amy and Sarah might not remember them.

"We were married when Rick was in his second year of university and I spent the next three years putting him through university—and I'll be doing that again, may I remind you," Mrs. Vaughan says, giving her husband a meaningful glance. "We were told not to get married until Rick graduated, and then we were told not to have children right away. But we did it and we did it well."

The two had met, suitably enough, at an end-of-summer music camp. Young Rick was the saxophone player for one high school, and Nada played the French horn for the rival band. For both of them, music was the most important part of their life.

"It's the joy of music itself, but there's also the joy of creating it with someone else—that team work and thrill of performance," Mr. Vaughan explains for the two of them.

Shock waves

However, in May of 1976, fate threw a wrench into their plans. Mr. Vaughan had a summer job with a contractor. A rigging truck was maneuvering through some hydro wires when a boom struck a wire and 17,000 volts of electricity went through Mr. Vaughan's right arm and left via his heels.

The right arm had to be amputated, forcing Mr. Vaughan to do some serious thinking about his future. "It's not too often you hear of one-armed music teachers or musicians," he says.

Hardest of all adjustments, however, was Mr. Vaughan's ability to play his beloved instrument. ("Rick won't say this himself," Mrs. Vaughan says, "but he was said to be the best saxophone player to come out of Western and that's why it was so traumatic.") Eventually he would go to Edmonton where his sax was revamped in such a way—too complicated to explain here unless you can understand what 'salanoids' are all about—that he could play with five fingers. "It's quite the gadget now."

Thanks to the support of his teachers and offers of various music jobs, Mr. Vaughan was able to resume his studies. On the home front, the young

A lesson in tolerance

News stories originating in Toronto stating that a former leader of the Nazi Party of Canada plans to stage a white supremacist rally on property near Minden next weekend, have dismayed and angered many local people. The thought that such despicable attitudes might be celebrated in a gathering, even if it is held on private property and proceeds peacefully, makes right-thinking people feel sick to their stomachs. Many want to respond — to express their contempt and to dissociate their community from the attitudes of neo Nazi's and other hate mongers — but the question is, how?

People are affronted by the suggestion that white supremacists might parade their intolerance anywhere in Haliburton County, even if they do it out of sight of the public, and make no attempt to inveigle others to share their views. There is no place in Canadian society for fanatical intolerance, for the neo Nazi view that one race is superior to another. There is no place, in fact, for organized and politicized hatred of any kind, no matter what banner it tries to hide behind.

That is not to argue, of course, that Canadians are or ought to be, like-minded on matters of politics or philosophy. There is room in Canadian society for a wide range of views. But the boundaries of appropriate dissent and free expression, while not precisely defined, are at least understood by most people to be circumscribed by truth and reason. And white supremacy, religious intolerance and the neo Nazi credo lie well outside them.

Perhaps the best course of action for local people to take in these extraordinary circumstances is the one they have already embarked upon. In expressing their concern, local people are confronting the reality of intolerance and hatred, a reality from which most Canadians are distanced both literally and intellectually. Although it may not seem so at the moment, with the long weekend rally looming all too largely on the horizon, this process ultimately is positive. Racism and hatred flourish in a climate of cold indifference but wither in the warmth of tolerance and love.

If the rally does proceed, it won't be with the approbation of the community. In fact, the recent publicity, as uncomfortable as it may have been, will serve to let people outside the community know that racial intolerance is as unacceptable to the people of Haliburton County as it is to civilized people everywhere. If that message is spoken loudly enough, and taken deeply enough to heart, it will render all manner of racial and religious bigotry ineffective. And that, ultimately, should be the goal of every Canadian, no less in Haliburton County than elsewhere.

Positive start

This weekend marks the first time that Haliburton County has ever attempted to stage a Highland Games. The local people who have worked many months to make the games possible will be joined by many others for whom the skirl of the pipes is irresistible, in doing their best to ensure that the weekend is a success.

No one can as yet be certain that the idea of a Highland Games for Haliburton County is a sound one. It seems, on the face of it, to make sense. There is, after all, a Scottish heritage in the community, and the landscape, in some respects at least, is not dissimilar to the Scottish Highlands — rugged, undulating, river creased and granite faced. And, too, there is a spirit of hard work and self sufficiency here that is not unknown to the Highlanders of Scotland.

In this first year, the local Highland Games cannot be expected to match, in number of spectators or participants, the Highland games that other Ontario communities have established, most notably in Fergus. But the site is good, the committee is willing, and the community is behind the games all the way. Even a modestly successful start will provide the foundation on which to build bigger and better games in future years. And that can only be good for Haliburton County. So hats off to the organizers, wishes for good luck, and a request, if anyone is listening, for good weather!

Survey not scientifically accurate

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Our readers write...

To the Editor:

I want to say how pleased I am that The Echo is covering local Council meetings so thoroughly. With regard to your front page article June 14, 1989, "Dock Plan raises houseboat concern" I would like to comment on Mrs. Lytle's statement that his planned expansion would only increase boat population by a little more than two percent.

As council meeting, Mr. Lytle handed out a "survey" in his own handwriting called "Cottage and Boat Survey Lake Kashagawigamog Chain", in which is listed the number of cottages on each of Soyers, Kashagawigamog, Canning and Head Lakes, plus the numbers and types of boats per cottage; from this he would have us believe his figure of a 2.37 percent increase in boat population from his proposed expansion at the Allsaw Bridge Marine.

I do not know where Mr. Lytle got his figures — I was not polled, nor was any other person I contacted over the past 10 days on these lakes, polled.

A study, to be even remotely relevant, must be recent, not two years old.

No study, done by a party heavily invested in a favourable/specific result can be considered reliable, let alone scientific.

Congratulations

To the Editor and Staff:

I would like to take a moment to congratulate you all, on your efforts which have brought an award-winning newspaper to our area.

The Echo adds greatly to the quality of life we all enjoy here. I find it to be an honest and caring reflection of our community brought about by the hard work and creativity of dedicated people.

Congratulations once again for achieving national acclaim in your category.

Sincerely,

EDITOR'S NOTE: The following is a copy of a letter sent to Ontario environment minister James Bradley by Kevin Walters, a Canning Lake property owner:

Dear Mr. Bradley:

I became aware recently that long-standing proposal to connect Kashagawigamog Lake resorts to the Haliburton sewage treatment plant is being pursued in earnest, and is presently under review by your Ministry.

When I first heard of the suggestion I presumed, or at least hoped, that the high cost of the connection would extinguish the idea. As a long time cottager on the lake chain (at Ingoldsby) with some background in water pollution control, I have great concerns over this proposal. Having witnessed with dismay the marked change in water quality in the lake system since the initial installation of the Haliburton plant, I can only conclude that any additional sewage loading to the plant (even with associated plant expansion) will lead to further water quality deterioration.

There appears to be little opposition to the plant expansion proposal and this is not hard to understand given the claims we have heard from its proponents; that water quality in Kashagawigamog Lake will not be harmed, or that it will even be improved. Furthermore, contrary to my observations of a deterioration in water quality (i.e. decreased visibility, appearance of filamentous algae and increased weed growth), others have claimed that collected data has shown no change in water quality since before the installation of the plant. Surprised by this, I obtained all readily available ("Self-Help" data on Kashagawigamog and Canning Lakes to see for my self. At first glance of this data, any remarkable change is not readily apparent, however, closer inspection reveals that a deterioration is documented nonetheless. A few errors or inconsistencies exist in the presentation of the documented data, and, once corrected, the change is more clear. I have summarized this data and included the specifics on the errors as an attached table to this letter, but I will briefly summarize here.

Correcting the 1972 chlorophyll a data to remove anomalies, and ignoring the 1985-onward data for the north basin of Kashagawigamog (because, "Venture Bay" is presumably the large embayment in the South basin), the following conclusions are reached: 1. The south basin of Kashagawigamog has seen an overall 19 percent reduction in secchi disc (clarity)

I HAVE SPOKEN on several occasions on the subject of community involvement. The community is where most of our day to day living is done and I think that we all have to agree that it is important to be involved in various aspects of community affairs. Many people get a great deal of satisfaction from being involved in local projects. One gets a great feeling of pride when he or she walks by something that they have helped to establish. The community is always in need of workers, whether they be involved in group projects or as individuals going out to better the lifestyle in the area. You must not forget that your community is only as good as you make it.

Have you stopped recently to notice the beautiful flowers and the trees that have been planted in Head Lake Park and in and around the village of Haliburton? Many hours of planning and hard work goes into this project and many thanks should go out to the members of the Haliburton Horticultural Society, municipal employees and others who have spent hours of their time in an effort to make Haliburton look nice for our local people as well as our visitors. With warmer weather and maybe a more gentle rain we should soon see and enjoy the results of this dedicated group of people. I was out for a walk one day this weekend I noticed Dorothy Baker hard at work planting flowers in the planters which have been placed along the main street. It was 7:00 AM and Dorothy had started working much earlier than this. She takes a great interest in her community and has given many hours of her time helping out in one way or the other. She certainly has not received the recognition she so rightly deserves.

On Monday, June 26 at 7:00 PM at L.C.V.I. Gymnasium in Lindsay, there is going to be a "Summer Breakthrough For Youth". The guest speaker will be Roger Robinson from Teen Challenge. Encourage a teenager to attend and call Nada Vaughan at 457-2718 for more information.

The eleventh annual Home and Vacation Show held recently at the arena and curling club at Haliburton is now history. The show, sponsored by the Haliburton Curling Club, attracted larger crowds than in previous years and everyone seemed to be of the opinion that this annual event was much better than last year and possibly one of the better shows in recent memory. The extra attractions added to the excitement this year and the three fashion shows sponsored by The Village Shoppe and Windsurfinn were a big hit with young and old alike. Instead of harming the attendance the rain over the weekend seemed to bring more people into town and the Home and Vacation Show benefited from this.

According to the recent Haliburton County Snowmobile Association Newsletter this past season was one of the worst for weather in Haliburton history. It's bad when it doesn't snow, but when it rains into fresh snow and freezes it is absolutely disastrous. The month of January saw the Association grooming stumps and rocks which took a heavy toll on the equipment again. This was only the beginning of the problems. The persistent rain turned to ice on the hills on their trails and slowed the grooming efforts to a snail's pace as the drivers and volunteers had to winch the BR-100's up virtually every hill. When the snow came the thousands of sleds that invaded Haliburton ground it into ice balls and the icy hills became even more slippery. To make matters worse three of the drivers quit in January from frustration with the terrible conditions that they were working under. At one point in January they shut down the grooming in the hope that they could save the equipment from further damage from sliding off the trails and into trees. According to the Association report the weekend trail counts — 1,200 sleds on the abandoned rail line in 8 hours and more than 2,000 on a weekend, 1,500 to 2,000 on the north end of the Nesbitt and 300 to 500 sleds was normal for virtually all of the trails.

Just a little reminder now that the summer season is with us once again. This is the time of the year that vacationers start to arrive in the Highlands of Haliburton. How they are treated when they are with us, and how well they are made welcome will depend largely on people like you and me. If our visitors are treated in a friendly manner they will enjoy their stay with us and will want to return to us again and again. It all boils down to this; we must deliver the service if we expect to get business back in return. Lets not forget that when you go on vacation you like to be treated as though you were at home. This means that we have to go out of our way to be friendly when the visitors come our way this summer. It doesn't cost a cent to smile or simply say hello.

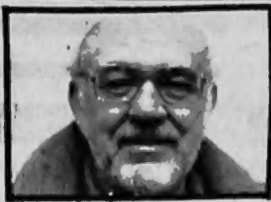

Reeve Murray Fearrey was telling me that a new family of baby ducks arrived last week and are staying near his home on Barnum's Lake.

Some more railway ties have been lifted up to make room for more parking areas near the present Rails' End Gallery and from there on down to the town dock. I was looking at the ties the other day and was amazed to find that after all these years they are still in very good condition.

POINTS OF VIEW

Plates collect memories, not dust

AS OTHERS SEE IT

Bob Giuliano

SOMETIME AGO, a friend protested on my birthday that folks couldn't get anything for me because I didn't collect anything besides books! "Look," my friend who is ten years older than me said, "find a hobby or start a collection so that we can give you junk!" He, an R.C. Priest, collected bells. Little tinkle bells and big brassy ones. "It's fun!" he laughed, "I've got a house full of bells!"

So the two of us started trying to think of something, some kind of junk that I would like to collect. Something that is cheap. Something that is valued by no one, yet hard to find, but not too hard. Something that would be, in time, interesting to me and maybe visitors. Something different. Maybe even something that most people throw away. That did it. I knew exactly what to collect: church plates!

Churches have pictures put on them and sell them by the thousands to raise money. Folks buy and lose them. I already had a few from guest speaking engagements, so we were off on my new hobby. All I had to do was announce that I collected church plates, and bingo, I had them! I now have seventy. The cottage is ringed with them, we eat from them, put potted plants on them and believe it or not, we now really treasure them. They are like a photograph album of memories.

My dad gave me his. They are of the churches he served during 50 years of ministry. My uncle gave me his — 40 years of ministry. Friends gave me plates of their churches, and family members did like-wise. Folks pick up interesting ones for me, like and old "Methodist Church in Canada" plate (before 1925 and one of City Temple, London, England prior to its being devastated in the bombing of W.W.II.

As a guest preacher, I am often given a plate by the church where I preach. (Trying to get rid of all those plates stashed in the U.C.W. closet). I have one from each of the churches my sons have served.

It's fun! we look around and say, "oh, that's Linda's church in Nova Scotia", or "that's Betty's childhood church," or "that church burned down," or "they ran me out of there."

A friend who sails brought one called, "The Bitter End Yacht Club, Virgin Gorda, BVI." He swears he went to church there! Same friend, not sailing this time, brought one from the "Last Chance Saloon," NWT. He made no claims about being in church, but knew I'd love the photo.

When I go to yard sales, I rummage through the plates and have found some dandies, churches long ago, lost or forgotten, and they're still cheap.

A dying woman, dug out three plates covered with grease and grime from years of neglect. They were of her childhood churches in New Brunswick and New Jersey. Because of these, I always remember Gertrude.

One of the three churches I first served had no plates and later closed. Betty had one made after Christmas one year. "My first church!" I exclaimed. Betty groaned. "It was also the church we were married in, you jerk!" It was our anniversary, also!

Got any old church plates collecting dust? Just leave them at the Echo office. It's my way of recycling and protecting the environment — and remembering.

Harvey Clarke

THIS SATURDAY, we'll be hearing the skirl of the pipes, as Haliburton hosts its first Highland Games. Do you suppose that everyone will suddenly become more Scottish, like everyone becomes 'Irish' on St. Patrick's Day?

Somehow, I rather doubt it. Just as I have a low tolerance for Irish 'tomcat' tenors, my wife stays as far away as she can from the sound of the bagpipes — though in neither case does it have anything to do with our ancestry.

It would seem that we are most fortunate to be seeing the bands and performers this weekend, for there are signs the arts involved are fading, for one reason or another, from coast to coast.

Pipers have been almost a trademark of Nova Scotia, particularly in Cape Breton, but also in Antigonish and Pictou counties in the eastern end of the province. Pipers have played at key entry points to the areas, and have been an integral part of all their tourist promotion down there.

Now, it seems, it is all fading. In some cases, it is because the people involved have gone 'down the road' to Ontario, often leaving their pipes and drums behind. (Perhaps some of them brought them along and are swelling the ranks for events like ours).

In other cases it is a combination of many factors. Lack of interest by the younger generation, the passing of older experts who've been the instructors, and the high cost of the pipes themselves.

A good set of bagpipes can run over $2,000. These days, they are usually the property of the band, rather than the piper. A spokesman for the Clan Thompson Band, says solo pipers have all but disappeared, and even the bands are struggling to stay alive.

The changing ethnic mix of our country may also be a factor, as witness the changes last month in Victoria, B.C. on the other side of the country. There, the city council passed a resolution requiring street musicians to move at least two blocks after each three-hour set.

The force behind this move wasn't a loud rock band, or even the kind of persistent self-accompanied singer that roams the Toronto subway system. It was a bagpiper.

It seems he has been serenading the British Columbia legislature every day, weather permitting, since 1978. Finance Minister Mel Couvelier said it was a "great relief" to all who worked in the front of the building. He's not a Scot, (though I would hazard a guess that even the most dedicated Son of the Highlands might tire of a day-long accompaniment on the job) — but then neither is the piper!

In these times in B.C. it would have made a better kicker for the story if his name was Li or Chan I guess, but our dedicated decade-long serenader was one Fred Tarasoff.

Oddly enough, the news story about a piper with a non-Scottish name gave me not only a smile, but a twinge of nostalgia.

As a teenager in the '40s, I moved to Kitchener from London, Ontario, and was anxious to make friends in my Grade 11 class. I was pleased to find I shared an aversion for PT — and the instructor — and found that a number of my classmates had found a solution.

Instead of taking physical training at school, you could join the Army Cadets down at the armouries in the Dunker building and get exempted. It was affiliated with the North Waterloo Regiment of the Reserve. It meant a couple of nights out, and your classmates were the officers.

The experience wasn't all up my alley, since it was still pretty physical, and it involved a lot of dumb discipline. It really wasn't the ideal place for someone whose favorite question was "why?"

But a friend who was teaching me swing drumming encouraged me to get into the drum and bugle corps, where I would get lots of practice on my basics, and more attention went to the musicianship than orders for the sake of training the officers.

I enjoyed the time I spent in the band, and it did help my drumming, even though I had trouble keeping in step. (Reg Gooding, the base drummer, had a standing order to step forward and whap me on the head with his padded stick if I got off on the wrong foot).

But what ties it all to the Highland Games, was when Bill Weber and I were lent to the reserve Pipeband which trained upstairs. Because it was wartime, and most men between 20 and 40 were in the forces, they had a constant shortage of players.

It was the roll call for the pipers at the beginning of the session that always had me on the verge of giggling.

There they stood in their splendid Scottish kilts and regalia, their pipes at the ready, answering the roll: "Schmidt. Schwartzentruber. Lautenschlager. Sweitzer."

I'll be thinking of them when I'm watching the current crop of Highlanders this Saturday — and wondering. Maybe it's the Fred Tarasoff's that are keeping the pipes and drums alive today...

DOWN OUR ROAD

Sharon Lynch

IT COULD NEVER BE SAID that she came from a lazy family. Quite the contrary. Her father would hammer, nail, chop and dig all day and well into the night to get a job done and her mother was known to work till she just about dropped in the heat if there was something that needed doing. So she came by it honestly—her capacity for work that is. For someone her size, for she was not all that big, she was amazingly strong. She attributed it back to her youth when she played a lot of baseball. Plus the broad shoulders inherited from her father's side. The stubbornness came from her mother's side though she preferred to call it persistence.

One summer she decided she had to have a stone walkway to her front door. Being proud of her modest cottage, on which she had done most of the finishing work, she felt it only right to have a suitable walkway; one that gave a favourable impression and prepared a person for the delightful place that lay behind the door. Not just any walkway would do. It had to be a "desire walkway". A "desire walkway" was one that curved gracefully rather than running in a straight line from end to end.

Rocks were not a problem since her cottage sat on bedrock and was surrounded by the rock-strewn landscape of the Haliburton Highlands. What was a problem was that her cottage was at the top of a hill, and a plentiful supply of rocks, all she would ever need in fact, were to be found at the bottom of the hill. The hill was too steep to use a wheel barrow. So she had to carry each rock up the hill one at a time. It took her an entire summer to accumulate a pile big enough to make her walkway. In the process of building that pile of rocks at the top of the hill, she also built up her own muscles. She knew this would come in handy when she started actually making the walkway itself. It also proved useful when a neighbour's car got stuck in some soft mud after a rainstorm and she was able to push the car out by herself. She was definitely becoming a strong woman.

Not really being sure of the steps involved in building a walkway, she nevertheless started out on her project the following summer. It seemed like common sense. She lugged around huge stones of various shaped and sizes working out the perfect pattern for her walkway. There she'd be in the heat of the day, old ripped denim cutoffs, a sweat-stained T-shirt, workboots and rag tied around her forehead to keep the sweat from running into her eyes. She was quite a sight.

Twenty minutes after starting in the morning her legs and arms would be smeared with dirt and perspiration, her face would be flushed from exertion in the heat and she would get this wild-eyed look if anyone dared to criticize the way she was doing the job. Towards the end of the summer, she had to admit, though only to herself, that she wasn't entirely satisfied with the way her walkway was emerging. It seemed to slant too much downhill and the steps were uneven. So she'd remove part of it, fit in different stones, stand back to look at the changes, then go to work again, rearranging, trying to get it right. She wouldn't dare cement it all together until it was perfect.

It had been a particularly hot day and she found that by mid-afternoon she had to stop. Her clothes were soaked right through and she was starting to get dizzy. The water in the river looked inviting so she put on her bathingsuit and went in. Its cold rushing coolness was just what she needed. It lowered her temperature, gently massaged her over-worked muscles and calmed her frustration over the walkway. After ten minutes of pure relaxation she felt a lot better. She changed into clean dry clothes and sat down at the picnic table with a cool drink in hand.

Casting her eye over the summer's work, she once again felt the frustration rising. Like it or not, she would have to call on her brother-in-law for advice. He was a real craftsman when it came to working with stone and cement. In fact his stone patio had the admiration of half the lake and the jealousy of the other half. Yes, he would certainly be able to tell her how to fix her walkway. But oh how she hated to have to admit defeat and ask. She decided to try moving around a few key pieces one final time and if that didn't work, then she'd go talk to her brother-in-law the next morning.

Over by the corner of the building in what was left of the once huge rock pile, was a large stone she hadn't found a place for. Perhaps if it was placed a certain way in the centre, it might make a difference. Unmindful of the fact that she was cleaned up and supposedly finished working for today, she

REMEMBER THE MOVIE Midnight Cowboy? Jon Voigt plays Joe Buck, a young hick from Texas who seeks wealth by working as a (ahem) hustler on the seedy streets of New York, who ends up lonely, poor and alienated after just a short time in the big, cold city.

Although my reasons for visiting Toronto last week were quite different (I was only visiting family, friends and major shopping malls), I had quite a strange reaction to the city where I spent most of my formative years. And it has only been three months since I left.

First stop was my parents' house in the suburbs. Driving through the neighborhood I noticed four new houses where there used to be fields. Even the houses next-door looked different—on one side the neighbors put in a bay window, on the other a new deck and balcony.

Next I visited a nearby mall. Now, there is no way I could count the number of times I've been to the Scarborough Town Centre since it's within walking distance from my parents' house, but while travelling from store to store in the mall I felt like I was on a different planet. Hordes of grim-looking people pushing past the crowds to reach for the sales and to avoid one another. I didn't stay long.

Later in the afternoon I had to go downtown to meet a friend when she finished work. Now, I've always disliked public transit, but this trip seemed to be worse than what I remember. Sitting in a double seat with my nose in a book, the person who sat down next to me smelled as if he were wearing

Can we agree to differ, please?

THROUGH THE PERISCOPE

Martha Perkins

I WAS SURPRISED to learn I didn't agree with everything Jerry Strickland had to say.

He's a Miskwabi Lake cottager who's very involved with the Federation of Ontario Cottagers' Associations and the Haliburton Highlands Water Levels Management Committee. In these capacities, and with his propensity to provide good, colourful quotes about a myriad of issues, he's often called upon by the Echo to expound on his views.

So when I went to his cottage to interview him last week, I thought my County Life story would focus on all those things we'd agree about: our need to keep more of our water out of the Trent Severn Waterway; fears that over-development will ruin a lifestyle; concerns about developments' effects on the environment; letting the government know what we think about delays to the Haliburton Hospital continuing care unit; and of course, why people should read their local paper if they want to keep in touch with what's happening.

But he said some things I disagreed with. Not vehemently, not with invective, but just as a matter of course. And I'm glad we have some differences of opinion. It just goes to prove that while seasonal and permanent residents sometimes have opposing perspectives, that's not enough to prevent a mutually

Cardiff students excel at Field Day

Dark clouds didn't dampen the events

by MARTHA PERKINS

Staff Reporter

The heavens were kind to the students of the Cardiff Elementary School last Friday when the annual field day events were held.

Dark clouds threatened to throw a damper on the activities but except for a little morning drizzle, the rain held off.

While the primary grades focused on activities such as ball tosses and movies, the older boys and girls competed against each other in several activities. Talents were pushed to the limits as the day progressed and the leaders strived to maintain their positions.

Before the trophies were handed out, Principal Dave Kennedy thanked all the people who had helped with the day: The students who gave it their best, and the teachers, parents and former students who acted as the officials.

The following is a list of the winners in the various categories:

JUNIOR GIRLS:

Seniors secure second spot

by ANNE HEWITT

Staff Reporter

The Haliburton Senior soccer team started off their week's play with a 4-1 win over Bracebridge on Wednesday, and followed it up with a 1-1 tie against Huntsville on Sunday, securing their second place standing in the league.

The junior team suffered a disappointing 3-0 loss against Muskoka Inter on the weekend, dropping them to the seventh out of eight.

The seniors had no problem pulling off the important win on Wednesday. A strong Haliburton offence was aided by two extra players (only nine players from Bracebridge showed up.)

Tommy Eager had an excellent game, scoring early in the first half. However, Bracebridge came back and tied up the game seven minutes later.

Team Manager Brian Moore says the team seemed to "mesh" in the second half of the game, and pulled ahead of the Bracebridge squad. Eager scored two more goals in rapid succession. A change in formation—increasing the number of forwards from three to four—seemed to work for the team.

"The results (of the new formation) speak for themselves," says Moore. "We had a strong offence. We kept coming at them, and they couldn't keep up with us. In the second half we were able to set up some plays and work the ball around. Bracebridge was trying to conserve their energy being short players. But they were still a formidable opponent. They didn't just lie down and die."

In the game on Sunday at the German Canadian Club in Huntsville, the team demonstrated their ability to play a strong soccer game, with a 1-1 tie.

Ton Struyk scored for Huntsville at the 25 minute mark on a broken play. The ball deflected off the foot of one of the Haliburton players, and into the net.

The seniors goal came later on in the first half on a well executed crossing pattern from an indirect kick. Joe Mancuso went into the open space and headed the ball over the head of the Huntsville goal keeper.

The team did have some opportunities to score, but Moore says there were not many chances to shoot within the 18 foot line. The wet field did not make play any easier, and even the new team uniforms couldn't spur the team on to victory.

The junior team lost 3-0 to Muskoka Inter, and Manager Gerald Morrison says although the team played consistently, they were still not playing as well as they could have.

"The forwards couldn't seem to get in close enough to get a shot," says Morrison. "But they got lucky on some shots. They weren't outplaying us that badly."

The team was missing several key players which slowed them down, but team members still had a good game. Jan Haedicke and Jason Dennis both had strong games. Haedicke controlled the ball and carried the play in his position as forward, and Dennis had a strong defensive game as centre full-back.

Change in environment improves athlete's skills

PLAYER PROFILE

by ANNE HEWITT

MOVING HERE FROM LINDSAY three years ago was the best thing that ever happened to Marc Sorenson's athletic career.

"When we lived in Lindsay you couldn't do anything," he says. "It was a big school, but it was really boring. The soccer team was picked before you got there to try out, and they didn't really have any coaches. Here each coach has their own little thing that they are really into, and you get a lot of attention."

And it is not just the sports that Sorenson likes about the area. He says the people are also an important aspect of what makes Haliburton so special.

"It is a really friendly town," he says. "In Lindsay our next door neighbour didn't even want to talk to us. Here they were knocking on our door, bringing us fruit. Everyone is nice up here. They make you feel welcome."

His interest in sports increased in defiance of his doctor's orders. Sorenson says when he was younger he was always sick. Because he had asthma he was never allowed to participate in any sports.

"It was like reverse psychology," he says. "I wanted to do it because I was told I couldn't. It was almost a challenge to go beyond what the doctor said I could do."

The 18-year-old Haliburton Highlands Secondary School student participates in just about all sports, but he excels at track-and-field and soccer. This year Sorenson made it to the regionals in track and field, placing ninth in the 400 metre, and seventh in the 200 metre. He was also a member of the 4x1 and 4x4 relay teams. With twelve teams entered in every event, the competition was fierce.

"It was harder this year because it was my first year as a senior," he says. "Some of the guys there were 20-years-old, and they were huge. I couldn't believe it."

Sorenson started playing soccer when he was in public school, but took a breather when he started high school in Lindsay. He joined the high school team when he moved here, and he is also a member of the Haliburton Soccer Club's junior team, which was organized at the beginning of the season. Soccer has always been a sport he has loved, but Sorenson is beginning to think that his true talents lie in track-and-field.

"I always dreamed that I wanted to be a big time soccer player," he says. "But I'm not that good. I'm not the best on the team. We have some really dedicated players."

Playing with the Haliburton Soccer Club has helped improve the games of all the players, who for the most part, belong to the high school team. The league is also allowing some up-and-coming players to develop the skills they need.

"Some guys who didn't make the school team are showing some ability," says Sorenson. "The league gives them time to develop their skills and start to play better. We are also learning control, not just endurance. We don't just kick the ball up the field and flood the zone. The guys are starting to think a little more. They'll say 'There is a guy open here so let's go that way and make a play of it'."

"I guess all those little drills paid off. Running up and down the field with the ball, with everyone thinking you look goofy."

The junior team also allows the boys to keep in touch over the summer, which Sorenson says is a big help in maintaining friendships.

"In the summer you lose touch with people," he says. "You get back in school and you aren't sure if they have changed. Now we go for a pizza after the game and talk. We keep in touch."

Sorenson has been off for a week with a broken toe, and will miss the next game as well. He says the sport is not as wimpy as some people believe.

"In football you bump heads for five minutes and rest for 20," he says. "And look at all the equipment they have. We only have shinpads. I've had all my teeth shattered in a game—I don't think too

Warriors beat Bobcaygeon 9-5

by ANNE HEWITT
Staff Reporter

After a three inning warm-up the Haliburton Warriors came alive, and beat Bobcaygeon 9-5 on Tuesday. However, they fell short two days later, losing to Fenelon Falls 3-2.

It took them awhile to get going for the home game against Bobcaygeon. The Warriors struck out on their first time at bat, with a three up, three down situation. The first two batters were caught out, and the third was thrown out at first.

Luckily their opposition got off to a slow start, with their first batter being struck out by Warrior's pitcher Ron Yake. The next two at bat were caught out on pop flies.

Bobcaygeon brought in two runners in the second inning, with three batters taking the base on balls. Erin Nicholls came in for Haliburton, but the team was unable to catch up.

The third inning was a repeat of the first, with both teams losing their first three batters. Yake walked to first but was then taken out on second after a hit by Barry Boice.

In the fourth the Warrior's energy level picked up, and they started playing the kind of ball that has secured them in second place in the league. The first Bobcaygeon batter walked to first base, but the next three players were thrown out.

At their turn at bat, five Haliburton runners came home, bringing the score to 6-2 at the bottom of the inning.

Bobcaygeon started a comeback bringing in three runs on a homerun in the next inning, but Nicholls countered with a homerun in the fifth. Boice and Yake came home in the sixth, securing Haliburton's 9-5 lead.

The Warrior's defence remained strong in the seventh inning, with the first three batters being thrown or caught out. Haliburton did not take their last inning at bat.

However, the tables were turned on Thursday night in Fenelon Falls with Haliburton losing 3-2 in a tight game.

The Warriors came on strong at the beginning of the game, retiring the Fenelon Falls side. Until the bottom of the fifth, the Haliburton team had a 2-0 lead over their opponents, with runs by Barry Boice and Mike MacNaull.

However, instead of finishing the game on a high note as they are known to do, Coach Scott LaRue says the team "tapered off".

In the bottom of the fifth, two runners came in on the Fenelon Falls team, tying up the game. The third run came in the bottom of the seventh, giving Fenelon the win.

"I'm pretty happy," says LaRue. "We are doing better than we anticipated, and I think we gave Fenelon Falls a pretty good run for their money."

The Warriors are second in the league with five wins and four losses. Fenelon Falls has first place with eight wins and two losses. Bobcaygeon is third with three wins and six losses, and Minden is trailing with two wins and six losses.

Strong start gives Haliburton the edge

by ANNE HEWITT
Staff Reporter

The West Guilford ladies softball team ended their undefeated streak in a big way last Thursday—with a 22 to 3 loss against Haliburton.

The Haliburton women came on strong right from the beginning, scoring seven runs in the first inning, and starting into their batting rotation for the second time. Another five runs came home in both the second and third innings.

West Guilford couldn't seem to make contact with the ball. Only one runner made it to base in the first three innings, and by the beginning of the fourth inning Haliburton was miles ahead with a 17-0 lead.

"Melanie Duchene started the pitch, and Haliburton seemed to catch on to her ball right away, and were hitting," says Joan Scott, the coach of the West Guilford team. "They picked the holes and were hitting to them. We just came up flat."

In the fourth inning West Guilford seemed to perk up. They got on the scoreboard with two runs, and managed to keep Haliburton down to three runs for the inning. In the fifth, West Guilford brought in one more run, but the damage was done, and Haliburton's two runs in the fifth secured their 22-3 win.

"Their pitcher was fantastic," says Scott. "She pitched an extremely good game, and it took us four innings to catch onto her ball. She pitches so fast, and the girls aren't used to it."

The game was called at the bottom of the fifth because of darkness.

Dumping to be closely monitored

by SUSAN GROBER
Staff Reporter

Anyone unhappy with controlled access at landfill sites better not throw their garbage in Lutterworth township unless they are prepared to pay a fine.

At last Thursday's council meeting, clerk-treasurer Jeunne Simpson said she has a list of 10 people who will be sent letters warning them to properly use the landfill sites or else receive a $50 fine for a first offence and $150 for subsequent offences.

"There are people who just drive past the dumps and throw their garbage" at the side of the road rather than use the blue bins which are provided, Mrs. Simpson told council. The names of the 10 people who will receive warning letters were discovered through magazine subscription labels and letters found in their garbage.

Groomer causes road icing problems

Equipment used by Lutterworth township's roads department took a beating last winter because of problems caused by snowmobile grooming equipment, says roads superintendent Kevin Hill.

Addressing council at last week's meeting, Hill said some snowmobilers were riding across the roads, pounding the frost down by as much as four or five feet, and making it dangerous for the township's snowplows.

Last winter, township council gave the Haliburton County Snowmobile Association (HCSA) permission to use the Davis Lake and Buller Roads. Hill said he finds no trouble with snowmobilers riding on the shoulder of those roads, and pinpointed use of the grooming equipment as the problem.

Soccer player finds enjoyment in all sports many football players have seen that much damage. And when you look at it, the number one sport in the world is soccer, not football."

Soccer is slowly starting to catch on at the high school, and Sorenson says part of the reason for this is the team's success, and the improvement of the other teams in the league.

"Before we were winning and no one noticed," he says. "Now the teams in the division are getting closer, and the games are better. We always make the playoffs, and last year we had the whole school out for the game against Fenelon Falls."

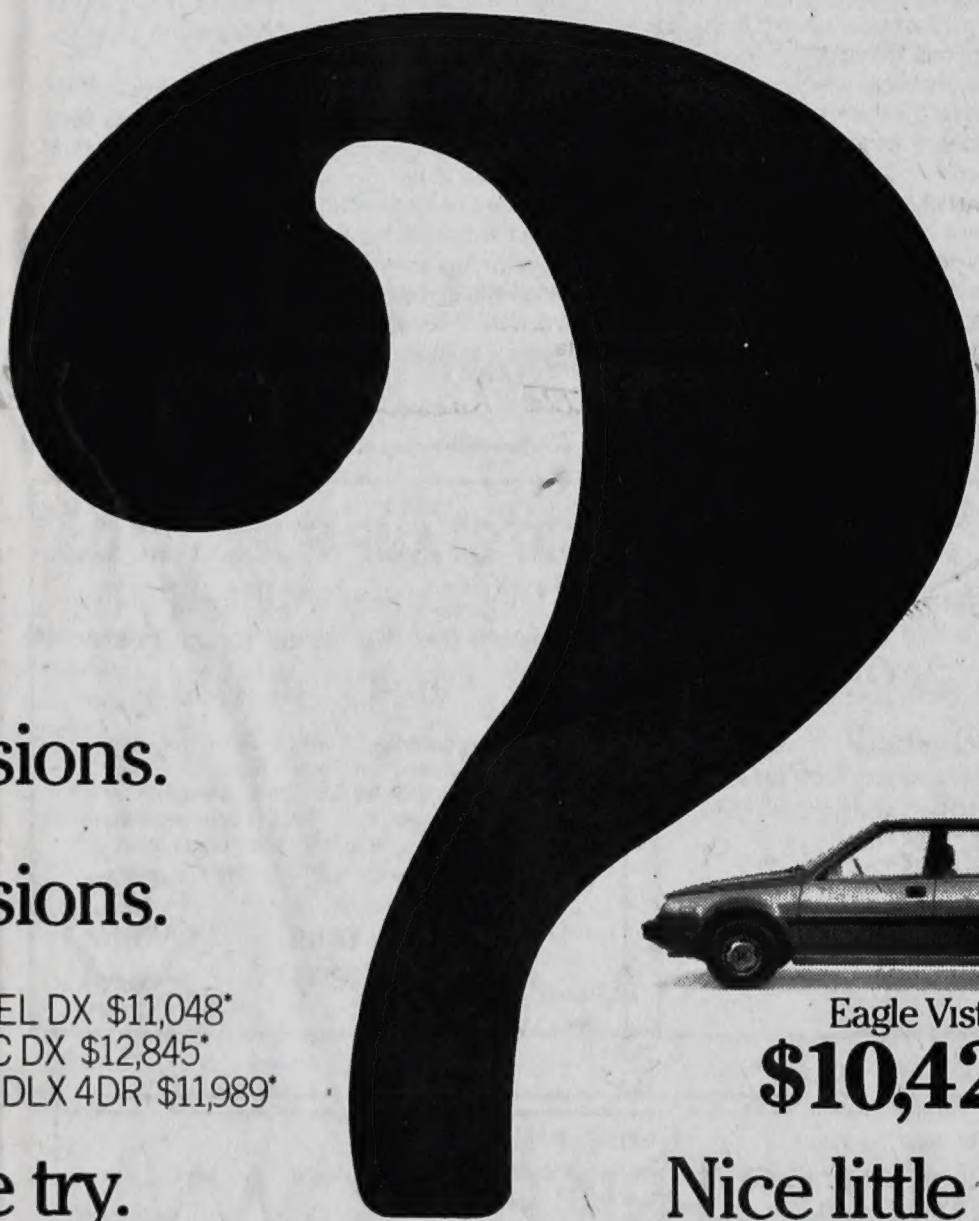

The rivalry between the two high schools is apparent in soccer, football and hockey, but it does not affect the track-and-field team to the same degree.

"In track the athletes from Fenelon Falls and Haliburton are close knit," says Sorenson. "They'd come over here and talk with us and visit. You still want to do better than them, but you cheer them on. Just because they live in Fenelon doesn't mean you have to hate them."

Next year, Sorenson expects the soccer team to have an even better season, and he would like to make it to the All-Ontario meet in track-and-field. As his athletic ability improves each year, Lindsay's loss becomes more apparent.

values since pre-plant days, with a continued reduction trend apparent. 2. The chlorophyll a (algae) values for the same basin has seen and overall average increase of 93 percent over pre-plant data. A trend here, however, is less apparent. Downstream Canning Lake has seen a corresponding 12 percent decrease in secchi disc values along with a 65 percent increase in chlorophyll a values. A very definite increasing trend to this latter data is evident to the point where the 1987 value was 217 percent higher than the pre-plant average. 4. The data for the north basin Kashagawigamog since the plant start-up is too sporadic to draw any conclusions; however, it suggests that the same is occurring here, as would be expected.

This is evident from this data that previously mesotrophic South Kashagawigamog is now approaching an eutrophic state and previously borderline oligotrophic Canning Lake is now decidedly mesotrophic, with all indication that it too will very soon reach the point of eutrophy if the influx of nutrients is not stopped. The source of these nutrients is undoubtedly the sewage plant and not due to say increased cottage development on the lakes. This lake chain was cottaged at a very early date and was essentially fully developed before the plant inception, and probably has not seen a 15 percent increase in cottage numbers since then. Furthermore, improvements in individual sewage disposal systems have probably nullified any impact of the new cottages, while many older cottages have upgraded their systems and thereby reduced any impact they might have had.

My concerns for the effect of increased loading to the lake is further magnified by the recent appearance of eurasian milfoil in a few locations in the lake chain. These lakes have many shallow areas and are therefore almost as susceptible to this weed problem as are the Kawartha lakes.

Ways to decrease the loading to the lake rather than increase it must be found. Obviously, no plant expansion could be a starting point. However, this alone does not solve either the alleged problem of the resort sewage or the problem of the existing plant effluent. An answer might be to improve treatment facilities, possibly by employing filters that I understand were originally intended to be used by have not been. It is doubtful however that significant enough improvements could be made at reasonable cost to compensate for any proposed flow increases and produce significant reduction in total loadings. Future plant expansions are also left in question. Certainly another plant must be discouraged.

As an alternative, I wish to offer the following as the possible solution to both problems.

The village of Haliburton is in the somewhat unique position of being readily able to remove its effluent from the sensitive Kashagawigamog Lake basin, and to instead discharge its effluent into a nearby river of comparable size having no lakes along its length to impact upon. The stream is upper Burnt River which joins with the present recipient stream, The Drag River, below the lake chain. This section of the Burnt River also has very low recreational use of potential. What is particularly unique in Haliburton's case is that the corridor between the plant and the optimum Burnt River discharge point already exists in the form of the abandoned railroad right-of-way which is now apparently owned by the County; who wonders what use it can be put to. This right-of-way also occupies the natural sag between the two rivers, minimizing the pumping requirements as much as possible.

I propose, therefore, that the effluent from the present plant, including any expansions thereto, be conveyed to the Burnt River at Donald. This involves a forcemain in 7.5 km. in length.

Some cost cutting measures are possible; since plant effluent would be pumped, the normal pumping station emergency and standby provisions would not necessarily be required. Also, since the drainage basin of the upper Burnt River is reached at only a 5.5 km. distance, it may be possible to discharge the effluent into the small drainage course adjacent to the rail bed at that point instead of extending a pipe all the way to the river itself. Furthermore, if space limitations at the present plant prevents or hinders plant expansion, some final treatment phases could possibly be relocated to the forcemain terminus. I attach a map showing this proposed forcemain alignment.

I request, on behalf of the Canning Lake Property Owners Association and myself, that the present sewage plant loadings to the Kashagawigamog Lake chain be reduced instead of increased, and, to that end, the utilization of the Burnt River as the receiving stream be thoroughly evaluated.

Yours very truly,
Kevin Walters, P. Eng.

Re: Haliburton Sewage Treatment Plant Correspondence of K. Walters dated May 23, 1989.

In response to the above mentioned correspondence, the Snowdon Township Council passed the following resolution at a special meeting held June 13, 1989. Resolution No. 177/89, passed unanimously by Council: "That the Snowdon Township Council wished to express their objection, in the strongest terms, to the proposal to divert sewage effluent from the Kashagawigamog Lake chain into the Burnt River system."

a dead cat around his neck to scare off evil forces.

Luckily he was only on for about seven stops, but the person who took his place, while less repulsive, was quite annoying. Some people jiggle their legs when nervous or bored, but this guy seemed to be doing some sort of Mexican hat dance in his seat. I sat still as a toad and buried my nose deeper in my book, although there was no way of concentrating on reading.

By the time I reached downtown I felt dazed, and it was while walking down Yonge St. that I remembered Joe Buck, the longhorn bull from Texas who walked the streets of New York with suitcase and radio in hand, feeling forlorn and watching the people in wonder.

Even the movie's theme song went through my head: "Everybody's talkin' at me, can't hear a word they're saying, only the echoes of my mind." During that stroll down Yonge St. I was in a dream world, my thoughts a torpid haze—car horns were honking in Friday afternoon traffic, brakes slammed, the air smelled of exhaust.

I couldn't wait to see the smiling face of my friend. Most people don't smile on the streets of Metropolitan Toronto unless they live right next door (even the people across the street don't say hello), or unless they want something from you. It just isn't done, although some people defy the rules of proper city etiquette.

During my visit my mother told me about our neighborhood newspaper delivery man who brought a free paper to the house after she cancelled the subscription. When Mom asked why he chose our house to deliver the extra paper, he pointed to my dad's truck and said, "That man is always nice. He waves and smiles at me on the street."

That day I smiled at a woman on my street and she just pulled her purse closer to her body and looked down at the pavement. Had the city changed so much since I left, or was it me who had changed?

While driving back to the cottage I revelled in gazing at all the trees and lakes and horses and cows. Finally tripping up the stone steps to the house, breathing in the pungent flowers and grasses, squishing caterpillars underfoot, I knew for sure this girl doesn't belong in the city.

System must be changed: Hingsburger

Dr. Hingsburger wanted to write about these two incidences but seven journals "didn't think it was important."

But some examples of what he is making public are more current. In a recent court case, a judge believed the testimony of a mentally handicapped woman who said she was raped repeatedly by a staff member at her institution. When the judge asked her why she didn't yell or try to run away, she said "because he told me to stay there."

"We need to question the system," says Dr. Hingsburger, who helped develop the system he now sees needing change. Old ways of dealing with behaviour problems must embrace the new understanding of who these people are.

"Have you ever considered using a positive approach?" he often asks people. Instead of reward-

All residents must work together—politely

respectful dialogue.

Before I continue, I think I should explain there are many different layers to life in Haliburton. In the past, newcomers were painfully aware that no matter how long they lived here, they still weren't locals. You had to be born here to wear that title. Then more and more newcomers started moving into the area and when there's strength in numbers, it became less important to be considered a local. Whether you were born here and stayed, or moved here and stayed, the common bond was an attraction to the beauty of the Highlands and the lifestyle it provides us with.

In another layer—the largest in numerical terms—are the cottagers, or seasonal residents. They used to only come up on summer weekends but now you can meet them on the ski trails and Wednesdays. Some of them have even retired here.

Then there are the tourists, the ones who rent, not own. I've even heard some cottagers breathe a sigh of relief in September when "the tourists are finally gone."

For me to describe to you the personality of the people in each of those layers would be impossible, though some have tried. You should judge people on their individual merits, not a stereotypical image.

So I don't think of Mr. Strickland as a "cottager." He's someone in the Highlands who's interested in what's going on about him and is willing to speak out. Newspapers depend on people like him.

I might have been tempted to call him a cottager as soon as he said things I didn't agree with: it might not be in the best interests of the lake to have permanent residents living along its shores; amalgamation of the smaller municipalities is the way of the future. But I didn't. Because Mr. Strickland demonstrates one of those attributes I hold most high—politeness.

When someone presents an argument which doesn't force people into "us vs. them" positions, you can amicably agree to disagree. Confrontation turns on people's defense mechanism, which makes them want to argue about an attitude, not an issue.

For instance, at one Stanhope council meeting, some cottagers arrived to voice their concerns. Without pausing for "Hello, how is everyone today," the spokesman launched into a diatribe which began "What are you going to do about..." You could sense the councillors' backs straightening, the gazes fixing intently at the speaker and their arguments clicking into place. "If that's going to be your attitude..."

Then again, last summer I talked with some cottagers who were not only concerned about a development plan but were also quite shocked at the rudeness they had encountered from some locals. The feeling was they should just mind their own business and go back to the city until the next weekend of ignorance is bliss.

Let politeness prevail. Then eventually all the lines between the layers will fade and the groups can merge into one solid community. The tie that binds would be a love for the Highlands and a desire to protect it.

THIS WEEK

Co-op students honoured at banquet

by NOELLE LaRUE

HHSS Student

LAST WEEK A BANQUET was held at the Haliburton Legion to honour and thank the Co-operative Education and Work Experience employers in Haliburton County.

Co-operative Education is for senior students who wish to gain experience in a chosen career or explore different careers. Students work for half a day every day of the school year and earn three credits.

Work Experience students take part in a World Of Work guidance course. The Work Experience course is made up of an in-school component dealing with attitudes toward work and skills needed to obtain and keep a job.

The out-of-school component gives the students a chance to practise what they have learned in school. The students are placed at work stations appropriate to their abilities and interests. The students earn a total of two credits with approximately 50 days throughout the school year at the work station.

This banquet honoured several different employers in Haliburton County who have shown a great deal of support for both programs, employing a total of 28 students from the high school. The banquet was to thank and show appreciation to those employers.

Students were also honoured at the banquet, and some received special awards. In the Co-operative Education program, Melanie Duchene won the award for the highest Co-op mark with an average of 78 per cent.

Eliza Rendall won the award for highest number of hours in Co-op. She put in 501 hours at Kinark School.

Don Cook, whose attendance was perfect, won the Co-op attendance award, while Melinda Lloyd won the award for most improved Co-op student.

The award for outstanding achievement in Co-operative Education given by the Ontario Co-operative Education Association was awarded to Angie Morrison.

Four students received awards in the Grade 10 Special Education Work Experience program. Jerry Bull, who worked at Carnarvon Lumber, achieved a top honour by winning the Work Experience award given to the most successful work placement.

Anita Shaw, who worked at the IDA Drug Store in Minden, received the proficiency award for excellent achievement both in school and at work.

David MacAusland, who worked at Valu-Mart, received the most improved award for improvement in performance at school and at work.

Three awards were presented to students in the Grade 9 Special Education Work Experience program. David Graham received the top honour by winning the work experience award for excellence in his work at the PineStone Inn and Country Club and in his work with the custodial staff at Haliburton Highlands Secondary School.

Charlene Davis, who worked at Extendicare, received the proficiency award and Bradley Trumbull received the citizenship award for his work at McMahon's Feeds in Minden.

PEOPLE

Vaughans' contributions measured in pound notes

family received a big helping hand from friends and family. They were living on the $240-a-month worker's compensation cheque, rent was $120 and no other government agency would support them financially because, they said, the Vaughans were already receiving assistance.

"If it wasn't for my dad...", Mrs. Vaughan says. "Every time he came to the door he had a bag of groceries in his hand. It was a rough time."

But they survived as young couples often do and after graduation, he applied for the job as music teacher at a high school in an unknown village called Haliburton. Classmate Melissa Stephens got the job instead, though, so Mr. Vaughan accepted the one-year post in Jarvis. One year later, when the regular teacher returned from sabbatical, Mr. Vaughan was looking for a job again. At the same time, Miss Stephens decided to go into private practice and HHSS needed a music teacher. Second time around, Mr. Vaughan was hired.

Every young musician has to go through a learning process, that's true, but isn't it difficult for someone who loves music to listen to all those initial off-key notes and untimely screeches? Mr. Vaughan smiles. "It's an odd sort of thing. It's like selective hearing—you have to be able to hear the good, you have to concentrate on improvements."

And Mr. Vaughan knew the important role his music teachers had played in his life. "You're a teacher first but the music teacher sees the students in many other situations so you get to know them better as people." In small schools, cliques are less likely to form because "students who have the will and spirit get involved in many things. There's a lot of crossover."

During his tenure, Mr. Vaughan liked nothing more than to perform pieces which he and the students had rehearsed diligently for hours. These efforts paid off last summer, when the band competed in its first Musicfest in Calgary, Alberta and earned a bronze standard.

Behind the bands

Apart from his school projects, Mr. Vaughan joined up with Archie Stouffer music teacher Glen Carter to form many groups including the Highlands Brass Quintet, a Dixieland band, and a Barbershop quartet. These groups would be heard at many musical festivities throughout the county. For a couple of years, Messrs. Vaughan and Carter organized the annual H.A.V.E. concert.

Mrs. Vaughan kept her hand in the musical pot by playing French horn with the quintet for a few years and taking part in Highlands Little Theatre musical productions. But her real claim to fame was her cooking, which she sees as her gift to others.

Every morning, Mrs. Vaughan could be seen going into one building or another with a basket of goodies. For instance, every Monday morning when she arrived at the Echo office as a temporary typesetter, she'd bring along a big basket of muffins. At Christmas, the selection was much more decadent and as John Stouffer remarked at a recent choir concert, Mrs. Vaughan's cooking has added great weight to the community's scales (and not musical ones.)

A tendency to give away the store

The one thing she wasn't good at, she admits, was owning the health food store—for nine months. "I found I wasn't a good business person because I gave too much away. I'm not a good person with money."

"Unless you discount spending it," her husband quips:

Which brings us to another point about the next three years. As the main (only) wage earner again, Mrs. Vaughan expects to rein in her spending, and that of her family.

"No new clothes, no new tapes, no new books," the girls recite. As their father says, they're going to have to do "a little more living by faith," instead of by wallet.

Mrs. Vaughan hopes she'll get another secretarial position at a church, a job she fulfilled for many years at the Haliburton United Church, as well as numerous committee positions. But she doesn't expect to spend her first months in Newmarket crying—except when thinking of the people she's left behind—because she'll be back among the friends and family she had to say goodbye to 10 years ago.

The girls don't expect going to a new school to be traumatic because they've enrolled in a small private Christian school in Stouffville. New friends will be made and there will always be the visits back to Haliburton.

Mr. Vaughan's not sure what the future will hold. He chose the Ontario Theological Seminary because it's non-denominational and has an excellent reputation.

"We are getting out of the United Church because we've become very disturbed over the general direction of the church," he says. "I was told that if I'm struggling now, I'd be struggling more if I went to the United Church seminary."

As well, he's not sure if all of this is leading him to a second career as a minister. "I'm not 100 per cent sure God's calling me to become an ordained minister. I'll go back into teaching perhaps, but at this point, I can't say what the future holds."

The next few weeks will be a blur of packing and farewells. "As much as Haliburton has a lot of beauty, it's the people who make Haliburton beautiful," says Mrs. Vaughan, who can pack her pots and pans a week early because of all the dinner invitations. "These are people we love very dearly and it's hard saying goodbye."

SCHOOL'S OUT FOR TEACHERS

Gerald Irish and students graduate to new challenges

by ANNE HEWITT
Staff Reporter

WHEN THE GRADE 8 students at J. Douglas Hodgson Elementary School graduate this year, they won't be alone. Vice-principal Gerry Irish will be leaving with them.

After 34 years as a teacher in Haliburton County, and 17 years as vice-principal at J. Douglas Hodgson, Mr. Irish is retiring. Although he looks upon the upcoming changes in his life with mixed emotions, he says the time has come for him to move on to other areas.

"I told the Grade 8 class that we were graduating together. They are going into high school, and I am going into a whole new way of life," he says. "I have mixed feelings, but I'm ready to retire. Ready to stop. I have to, before I stagnate. You can be in one position too long."

It has been so long since Mr. Irish first decided to go to teacher's college in Peterborough, that he can no longer recall what pointed him in that direction. However, he has had no regrets, and has not looked back once along the way.

An accessible profession

The circumstances at the time of his graduation from high school may have had something to do with his decision. Schooling was a major financial undertaking, and teaching was one profession that was considered to be a good financial risk.

"At that time teaching was one of the most accessible professions. There was a great demand for us, and you were assured a job," he says. "And training was only a one year deal at that time. My parents were not wealthy, and even one year was a financial sacrifice."

There have been many changes in the education system since Mr. Irish took his first job at the Lakeview Centre (now Sir Sandford Fleming College's campus.) The most notable difference is the amount the children have to learn, and the pressures of time that teachers now face.

"The Ministry is wanting us to do more and more—the courses are heavier and more demanding," says Mr. Irish. "And time is a real factor. Years ago we weren't pressed for time. Even in a one room school we had time to get to know each other. We were one unit really. Now you don't have time. Time is of the essence in education now. We keep offering more and more to our kids and don't expand the amount of time we have to teach it. Teachers are really pressured."

"It's time the Ministry says 'Whoa. What do children need to survive, to be good citizens, to be gainfully employed?' It's time we get back to what we really must have."

The format of the education system has also changed. One room schools, housing all eight grades, are a thing of the past. They have been taken over by modern buildings, with large staffs, and modern technology such as computers. And the teacher of the past is also fading, as their role in the school

'I have mixed feelings but I'm ready to retire' changes.

"We came out of teacher's college not knowing much about teaching. It was really trial and error," says Mr. Irish. "Hitting a one room school with all eight grades and no modern equipment meant you had to be organized. You had to have a lesson for one grade, and seat work for the others."

"And you learned in a hurry how to handle all types of situations. You were everything—custodian, substitute parent, doctor, judge, and jailer. But you didn't have time to be a baby-sitter."

A change in perception

As society became geared more towards technology and business, the position the teacher held in the community evolved to the point where the teacher was no longer a demi-god.

"Thirty-four years ago a teacher was a respected person in the community. They were looked up to,"

"I've threatened to come back and wait in the parking lot to wave at everyone. But I'm not looking back. I've always looked ahead. I will miss it after 34 years, but not enough to look back."

'There are very few dull moments' for vice-principal

For Gareth Kellett, goodbye means a look to the future

by ANNE HEWITT
Staff Reporter

AFTER 34 YEARS AS A TEACHER, Gareth Kellett is retiring as vice-principal of Archie Stouffer Elementary School. But don't think for one minute you won't be seeing him around anymore.

"I've threatened to come back and wait in the parking lot to wave at everyone," he says. "But I'm not looking back. I've always looked ahead. I will miss it after 34 years, but not enough to wish I was back."

While the decision to retire was not an easy one to make, Mr. Kellett is sure he has made the right choice. Although he does not know what he will be doing in the future, he says you just have to take one day at a time.

"I hope it won't be a big readjustment. I haven't put a whole lot of thought into it," he says. "But, it's the journey that's the most important, not something at the end. You will never reach a utopia if that is what you are aiming for. You have to live every day, and tomorrow will likely take care of itself."

A lot to learn

This day-by-day attitude is partly responsible for leading Mr. Kellett into teaching. When he first graduated from high school he had wanted to go into the RCMP. However, his father's death changed his plans, and he ended up taking a six week course in the summer to see where it would lead him.

"After the summer course I thought I knew all there was to know," he says. "Until the first day of school. Now I feel sorry for the students I had, when I think of what I didn't know back then."

Mr. Kellett spent two years teaching at the Blairhampton school before heading to Peterborough for teacher's college. With two years of experience under his belt, Mr. Kellett says he was able to get more from his formal training.

"I was better equipped when I went to teacher's college," he says. "It was like a co-op program. I knew precisely what the teachers were talking

'The decision was scary'

Refreshing change ahead for Chris Bailey

by ANNE HEWITT
Staff Reporter

WHEN CHRISTINE BAILEY asked for a transfer from Gooderham Elementary School, everyone was caught off guard, but Mrs. Bailey feels it is time for a change.

She has been in Gooderham since she started teaching 18 years ago, and for the past 17 years she has been the principal. However, the administrative aspect of the educational system does not hold the same allure as teaching.

"Being in the classroom with the kids is where it's at," she says. "There are so many interruptions in the office with the phone ringing, and making decisions. Next year I won't have to do that. I'm going to enjoy having someone else making the big decisions. And I'm not going to miss answering the phone or checking for head lice."

Next fall Mrs. Bailey will be teaching Grade 3 at J. Douglas Hodgson Elementary School, and she is looking forward to the changes the move will carry with it. Her class size will increase (at the moment she is teaching for four days a week, and working in the office for one full day), and she will be part of a larger staff.

"My teaching is getting stale," she says. "By getting in a bigger group of teachers I will be able to refresh myself. I have never had the opportunity to teach with another teacher at the same grade level. It will be good to share ideas."

"There will be lots more children than I'm used to, but I'm ready for a change and a challenge. At a certain point in life, everyone is ready."

The right career

Since she was in Grade 2 Mrs. Bailey has wanted to be a teacher and now does not regret any of the time she has spent in the classroom.

"My mother and father always encouraged me," she says. "And I have always loved to teach. My father once said I was lucky to have a job that I love and be able to go to it. I guess I chose the right career—I don't watch the clock, and when I get home I want to tell my family all the funny things that happened at school. It makes for great conversation."

When she graduated from teacher's college in Peterborough, Mrs. Bailey went to work at the Gooderham school. One year after she started she was asked to take over as principal, and after a lot of thought she decided to give it a try. At that time you didn't need your principal's qualifications for the smaller schools.

"The decision was scary. Should I do it or not?" she says. "But my principal encouraged me. I still had lots to learn, and I made a lot of mistakes along the way, but the two directors I had were good, and overlooked my mistakes. Everyone learns from their mistakes."

Until now Mrs. Bailey had no strong desire to leave the school. She enjoyed the small, close-knit group of people, and found the staff wonderful to work with.

"I had a great staff," she says. "With only two or three teachers you don't know if you are going to click. But they all gave me a 150 per cent effort."

The parents and children at the school also helped make her job enjoyable. Mrs. Bailey says she has always practised an open-door policy, and both the parents and children generally come to her if they have a problem. Knowing the families so well makes her job that much easier.

"In some cases I'm teaching the child of a child I taught when I first came to the school," she says.

about, and could relate to the situations they were talking about because of my two years experience."

However, no amount of formal training could prepare Mr. Kellett for the changes that would be taking place within the education system. He says more demands are being placed on education, and more is expected of teachers.

"We are now more involved in other aspects of the children's lives," says Mr. Kellett. "Any and all types of students are in the classes and they all have the same opportunities in school."

"We now spend a lot more time with our exceptional students. Thirty years ago they got lost in the shuffle because we didn't have the expertise to deal with them. Back then everyone was a general practitioner. Now there are a lot of specialists."

Mr. Kellett also notices differences in the children going through the school system now. He says they are far more knowledgeable, and thinks television and computers have a lot to do with the children being more aware of their surroundings. The one room school house did have its advantages, such as producing students who were very independent, but like many other things, it has become outdated, and there is no room for it in today's society.

"I didn't find it any more difficult to teach eight grades than one," he says. "But I don't think a one room school could do well today because of the knowledge expected of the grade levels. It would be hard to give the type of education I would want to give."

In order to keep on top of education, Mr. Kellett says you need to be able to change constantly. Mastering new technology is a constant struggle, but the rewards of learning new things is worth the battle.

"You have to be able to change, to bend with the times, with the new ideas and the new ways of teaching," he says. "But teaching is one area where there are never two days the same. There is always of it I should be prepared to become part of it. I'm the type of person that if I am part of an organization I become totally involved. I don't sit on the sidelines."

His involvement with the federation has put him in contact with teachers from across the province,

"You have to be able to change, to bend with the times, with the new ideas and the new ways of teaching.
It's getting more difficult to keep up with change. Things are evolving more rapidly today. A computer developed five years ago is almost obsolete now."

Tears will be shed at year's end

"I know the families, as well as the children. If one of the kids misses the bus, I know exactly where to drive them."

"I like the days that I have in the office because if a child is bothered I can bring them in and talk to them—like a counsellor. And if they have a problem, they'll come in and tell me about it. It is not quite as easy with older children. But here they don't mind sharing with you."

Teaching the Grade 3 class will be particularly rewarding for Mrs. Bailey because she enjoys children that age. When you watch her blowing bubbles with the kindergarten class it is apparent that she is good with the younger children as well, but she says she likes the personalities of the children when they get to be a bit older.

"I really like their sense of humour at that age. You can joke with them and they will joke back. They are not afraid at that age to tell you things, and you don't really run into any discipline problems. And they are very inquisitive, and at that level I generally know the answers," she says laughing.

Leaving the familiar

Even though she is looking forward to the change in schools, Mrs. Bailey realizes that the move will be take some getting used to. She admits that she will probably be halfway to Gooderham when school starts in September, and will have to turn around and head back to Haliburton. She also admits that she probably won't leave the school dry-eyed at the end of the year.

"Usually we leave on the last day of school kicking up our heels and going yahoo," she says. "This will be the year I cry when I leave. But I think it will be good for me and for the school to have a change."

Mrs. Bailey is not the only one eagerly awaiting the change. Her husband and two children are also looking forward to having her in Haliburton. Her daughter, Heather, will be in Grade 5 at J. Douglas Hodgson next year, and her son, Ian, is going into Grade 2 at the Victoria Street school. Having her daughter at the same school she is teaching at doesn't seem to worry Mrs. Bailey, who has had to deal with worse.

"Heather says she is going to pretend she doesn't know me, and she probably will ignore me," says Mrs. Bailey. "But when I practice taught, my brother and sister were in my class. It was about the only time they ever listened to me."

But when Christine Bailey talks, people listen—out of respect, and out of friendship—which is why students at J. Douglas Hodgson can look forward to next fall. Even if it does mean the return of homework.

something different. It makes it very interesting. There are very few dull moments.

"It is getting more difficult to keep up with change. Things are evolving more rapidly today. A computer developed five years ago is almost obsolete now. That is indicative of the whole educational system. It becomes harder to stay on top of things."

Seeing student as people

However, it is not difficult to stay on top of what is happening with the students. Mr. Kellett makes a point of becoming acquainted with all the new children at Archie Stouffer. Not only does he enjoy getting to know the students, but he says it is important for the children to be recognized as people.

"You have to take the time to get acquainted with the children," he says. "The more you do so, the better the relationship between you and the student will be. When a teacher walks down the hall and speaks to a child it makes quite a difference."

In addition to his teaching job, Mr. Kellett is also active in the Ontario Public School Teacher's Federation. He is involved at the executive level locally, served as president for two years, and has been on several provincial committees. He feels becoming a part of the group was important for him as a teacher.

"It is a professional organization that looks after our needs," he says. "I felt that if I was a member and he says it has opened up an "avenue of people to draw on for ideas".

Now that he is retiring he will not be able to continue his work with the federation, but he plans on joining the Superannuated Teachers of Ontario—an organization for retired teachers.

The legion will also benefit from Mr. Kellett's retirement. He is a member of the Royal Canadian Legion, Branch 636, Minden, and plans on spending a lot more of his energy on legion activities. He will also pursue an interest in photography, and possibly work on his golf game, which he says could use some improvement.

"It may take the next 35 years to improve my game," he says. "It is a lifetime vocation to learn how to golf. I would like to spend more time at it for my own enjoyment."

Keeping busy, and having the time to do the things he has been putting off while working, are two things Mr. Kellett is looking forward to. However, with so much to do it will take some rearranging of his schedule to find time to sit in the parking lot and wave.

Close ties with students make Irish's job much easier

says Mr. Irish. "It's not to the same degree now. We've become more humanized, and that is both good and bad. It is good that parents and children feel we are approachable, but it was easier to deal with them when all that respect was there."

"It used to be that the teacher said something, and that was the decision. There was no fight over it—no parents petitioning the Board of Education, or threatening the teachers."

The changes in society affected more than just the teachers. Mr. Irish says the students have also changed in the 34 years since he has been teaching. He says when both parents are working there is an effect on the children. They often end up forgetting common courtesies, and respect for others and themselves. The schools, in many cases, end up establishing boundaries that should be set in the home.

"Please and thank-you are so easy to say, but if the children don't do it at home, how can we get them to do it here?" says Mr. Irish. "Children need guidance, they need limits set for them. A lot of households let the children set their own parameters."

"Kids are kids. They will test you to see how far they can go, and then they'll stop. They want that boundary. It is all due to changes in society. Parents are so busy that they don't have time to listen. So I do a lot of that here."

Rapport with the children

It is obvious after spending some time at J. Douglas Hodgson that the children do enjoy talking to Mr. Irish, and listening as well. If he is spotted in the playground during recess, or roaming the halls, it does not take long before there is a crowd of children around him. He says part of the reason the children are so attached to him, is that he makes an effort to get to know them.

"I make a point of learning the names of all the new little ones each year," he says. "There is nothing more important than someone's name. They become people not just little bodies."

"It is a skill that's really stood me well," says Mr. Irish. "I even do it in restaurants and shops where people wear nametags. They give you a second look, but they are nametags that you used their name. It's the same with the kids. You don't just say 'Hey you'."

Part of Mr. Irish's job involves disciplining students who have broken the rules. However, he says knowing the children so well does not make his job more difficult. In fact, it often makes it easier.

"Sometimes it is easier to deal with the kids because I know their background, and their families," he says. "And the parents know how I deal with situations and the kids. I always tried to make myself available to the parents, even when I was at home in the evening. I've talked on the phone and listened to their beefs."

"We all think our child is the best, the greatest—little gems who can do no wrong. Realistically we know better—teachers understand parents. Parents sometimes get angry with me and once in a while I get angry back. It helps clear the air, and everyone feels better."

However, Mr. Irish does not feel the need to clear the air very often, and he says discipline is not usually a problem at the school. When he first started teaching the strap was used to solve behaviour difficulties, and Mr. Irish looks upon its use as a sometimes effective method of punishment.

He says although the strap was abused in some schools, it was only used a J. Douglas Hodgson as a last resort—once every other method of discipline had been tried. A member of staff was always present when the punishment was administered. The strap hasn't been used for a number of years, and is discouraged, but the school can still administer the strap if they like.

"In some cases it did teach the child—Whoa. This is what happens when you do go beyond the limitations we've set," says Mr. Irish. "Out there in the real world it is not all roses. If you don't do what you are told to do by the law or government, you are going to be punished."

"There have to be limits and penalties. I'm not advocating beating kids with the strap but there is a place for it in the education system."

Varied approaches to teaching

Discipline is just one aspect of Mr. Irish's job, and he says teaching has provided him with an opportunity to meet all different kinds of people, and to work with different teachers, each of whom have their own unique teaching style. He says different teaching methods make it better for the children, and learning can be achieved in a variety of ways.

"Every year when the summer winds down I'm ready to go back to school. This year I'll be chomping at the bit like an old racehorse at the starting gate."

"I'm so pleased with the strong staff we have here, and all the different styles of teaching they have," he says. "We have some traditional teachers who lecture, and those who have brought in all the innovations and gadgetry—VCRs, and overheads. As the kids go through the system they are exposed to all these styles."

And the classroom is not the only place where students can learn. Valuable information can be gathered outside of the school, and Mr. Irish feels fieldtrips are an important aspect of education, provided they are not merely a form of entertainment.

"Field trips, playdays, all of these activities are very important. They expose our children to other parts of the province and other ways of life," he says. "Some students would live in a narrow world in Haliburton if the school didn't provide an opportunity for them to see new things."

"They also allow teachers and students to see one another in a situation outside of the classroom. They can see teachers in a whole different light. However, not all field trips are educational, like trips to Canada's Wonderland for instance. I don't think we've sent students on trips that weren't educational."

When the school bell rings on the last day of school, Mr. Irish, and his wife Joan (the couple met when she was teaching at J. Douglas Hodgson) are looking forward to travelling and running their motel, the Silver Maple.

In order to take his mind off school when it is time to go back in September, Mrs. Irish has planned a trip to Ireland, because the "Irish should see Ireland". The 16-day trip is a retirement gift, and Mr. Irish is sure it will help keep his mind off the place where he has spent so much time.

"Every year when the summer winds down I'm ready to go back to school," he says. "This year I'll be chomping at the bit like an old racehorse at the starting gate. With this trip I won't want to be back here. Boy, does Joan know me."

The couple has also planned 63 day tour of Hawaii, New Zealand, Australia, and Fiji for 1990. The staff at the school knew of the couple's plans to travel, and presented Mr. Irish with an eight-piece luggage set, which he is sure he will put to good use.

When they are not travelling, most of their time will be taken up running the motel. The purchase was made last year, in order to help the couple ease into their retirement years.

"Up until we bought the motel I wondered what I was going to do in my retirement years. We are not the type of people who can sit back and vegetate," he says. "Retirement was something I feared because what was I going to do? The motel is a whole new life. It does keep us busy, and it has removed that fear of retirement."

Now that the time has come for Mr. Irish to leave, many still do not believe that he will not be back in September. "People, including myself thought I would go on forever. But they realized that I can't go on forever. I've got to stop sometime."

But while he may not be part of the school on a day-to-day basis, teachers, students, and parents can rest assured that part of Mr. Irish will always be with the school, and part of the school will always be with Mr. Irish.

Ex-Nazi on legion black list

by MABEL BRANNIGAN

Various out-of-town news media have contacted me recently regarding a person in the community who is allegedly linked with legion membership and who will be holding a rally on July 1 weekend for a racist group specifically known as the "skinheads". For some years I have seen this person's name reported in Toronto papers as leader of the Canadian Nazi party. Such notorious ideas are totally incompatible with Legion ideals of loyalty to the Sovereign and to Canada. Further, for a person of this calibre to take the oaths and declaration of the Royal Canadian Legion ritual is an insult to every Legionnaire in Canada. As your President, I can assure our general body that this person is not, never has been, and never will be allowed in our Branch.

In fact, prior to any reports being issued about his recent affiliations with such groups, I had asked our manager place his name on our black list which would ensure that he would be barred from clubroom or Legion functions forever. There is no place in our organizations for people of his kind.

On Sunday, the Haliburton Legion Pipe Band along with a colour party and marching unit attended the decoration memorial service at the Minden cemetery. A colour party and members from Kinmount also attended. The service was sponsored by Branch 636, Minden.

Albert and Isobel Jobin have sold their business on Paradise Lake, and it is good to see them enjoying life with their friends.

PEOPLE

Students brighten pen pals' day

by SUSAN GROBER

Staff Reporter

EVERYONE LOVES TO get a letter in the mail amid the junk ads and bills. By just dropping a simple note, you are opening your heart and mind to a friend.

That's why pen pals are so popular. There's something special about writing to someone you might not have even met. Many people never get a chance to ever see their pen pals in person, but a group of Archie Stouffer Public School students and residents from Hyland Crest Senior Citizens Home would highly recommend that those people make the effort.

Students in Bonnie Lee Berry's Grade 5 class in Minden have been corresponding with some of the residents for the past year and both groups were thrilled to meet at a barbecue at the home last week. Munching on hamburgers, hot dogs, ice cream and doughnuts, people from wholly different generations were chatted happily to one another like old friends.

The idea for the project started with George Simmons, who phoned Mrs. Berry saying he wanted to do something for the Home in his new role as Snowdon reeve and Hyland Crest committee member, and thought his son Richard's teacher might come up with some suggestions. Mrs. Berry then contacted Hyland Crest adjuvant Linda English, who came up with the pen pal concept.

Both sets of pen pals have learned a lot through the project, although it was difficult finding writing topics for some. Lola Prentice, Mrs. Berry's mother, had two pen pals, Carrie Martin and Max Weber, but she didn't find all that writing a chore.

"I've enjoyed it very well," says Mrs. Prentice. "I write just about everything I think of, but I generally try to write things of interest. Usually I write things about the Home so they can have some kind of idea about what kind of life we live here."

Mrs. Prentice says she found writing to Max a lot tougher than writing to Carrie. "Being a boy, I wasn't sure what he would find interesting. So we'll write about cats and dogs, and other animals."

Max says he knows what to write just from reading one of Mrs. Prentice's letters. "She gives me lots of good ideas."

"I try to give them both a little lead that will help them know what to write about in their next letter," she says, and adds that she's not always sure whether the topic she has chosen is interesting to either of her pen pals.

"I once asked Max if he'd prefer writing to a man. He said, 'Oh no, I love writing to women,'" teases Mrs. Prentice. "We've really enjoyed the project. And we like our pen pals. We'll be losing them all. They'll all be in a different class next year."

Resident Jean Taylor says she finds it tiring to write letters at times. "I don't write very much. I'm too old to do that now," she says with a smile. Has Mrs. Taylor enjoyed her correspondence with pen pal Jami Swinson? "Yes, I have, because I'm very much alone here. I liked it a lot. He's a very nice boy." Mrs. Taylor doesn't just discard Jami's letters after reading them. "I've kept a few and I've read them two or three times," she says.

Jami appreciated the opportunity to meet his pen pal. "I thought it was really exciting," he says. Kyle Cox's pen pal, Ina McGuire, is a room-mate so they had to visit in her room.

Ada Turrall was thrilled with the African violets brought by her pen pal, Eric Kramkowski.

Marita Schrader brought a picture of herself in a little gold frame for her pen pal, Mary Oliver. Marita was originally writing to Ruth Gorrie's mother, Emma Stutt, whose recent death made her "very sad. I wrote a letter to Mrs. Gorrie to tell her how sorry I felt."

Activities director Doris Robertson spoke to the pen pals after they had eaten their lunch. "We've tried for years to get something like this at Hyland Crest," said Mrs. Robertson. "Those who live here are very interesting people, and I think the boys and girls know that now."

Some discovered they have a lot in common with their pen pals. Geoff Oitment, who works on a school newsletter, Times Jr., would discuss his work with Winnie Barnum, who writes the Senior League column for the local newspapers. Angie McGann's pen pal likes the Agnes Jamieson Gallery. Melissa Bittner and her pen pal both like cats. Melissa's pen pal is blind, so she tries to describe the way things look in her letters.

All learned quite a bit from the experience. And the classroom was buzzing with excitement the week before the barbecue. Each student wanted to share what they know about their pen pal.

Scott Bailey's pen pal comes "from out west" and describes how buffaloes travel back and forth in the same tracks. Sarah Johnson learned that her pen pal would watch from her window when Sarah went tobogganing last winter. Cory Burk's pen pal has a grandson who is a "wild young lad" and has the same name, but spelled C-O-R-E-Y. Amanda Stevenson's pen pal has seven children and 14 grandchildren.

It was a little past lunch-time when all the students finally had a say about their pen pals, and Amy McMahon was anxiously bouncing around in her seat. "Can't we go now?" she pleaded with Mrs. Berry, who assured her that the students would get extra time for lunch. "No, not that. Can we go to the barbecue. I'm all excited, I can't wait to see my pen pal. On the weekends I might be going to see her. She says she can't wait to see me."

The pen pal project certainly opened a few doors for some special people.

A little old-fashioned electricity makes even the remotest camp or cottage seem civilized. With a Yamaha EF 600 or ET 600 generator you'll have power for light bulbs, a refrigerator, a colour TV, even your stereo system. Take one on your next outing. With a little Yamaha power you'll have something besides the buzzing of mosquitoes to listen to.

at 20% off the retail price from now until July 1, 1989.

Few artists can seriously claim the popularity that Keirstead is enjoying today. But then few artists have ever captured the rich diversity of the North American countryside the way that Keirstead has. Painting with knives, he creates sharp, boldly textured works that are amazingly real. He paints the picturesque coasts along the Eastern seaboard; the rustic old mills and charming homesteads of the North East; the rugged wilderness of the Canadian Shield; the wild flowers of the Arizona desert and the breathtaking Rockies of the West.

The artist, born in Saint John, New Brunswick on December 18, 1932, has now held more than 60 successful one-man shows across Canada and the U.S.A. Popular books, reproductions and collector plates have established him as one of Canada's foremost painters. Continent wide distribution has made the art of Keirstead available to millions.

One result of all the public attention is that Keirstead has been the focus of television specials on CBC, CTV and PBS. In 1984 he was chosen Artist of the Year by the Plate Collector Clubs of Canada. Keirstead Gallery's first plate, "Do They Bite?", was named Plate of the Year. Another Keirstead painting of an old mill became the popular show plate for the 1985 Plate Fair.

Salad supper is coming up

WEST GUILFORD NEWS
by Eleanor Cooper

Life has been busy at Holly and Sylvia Sisson's lately. The week following the Zone Drumhead service in Niagara Falls, they attended the Sunderland Legion's 60th anniversary on June 4. On June 11, they attended the R.C.A.F. Wireless Air Gunners' reunion in Ottawa. Last Saturday evening they attended the Presidents' Ball at the Legion in Haliburton where presidents of surrounding area branches were honoured, including Minden and Kilmount. At present their daughter, Juanita with her husband Terry Hougstol from Metiskow, Alberta, and their little boys, Matthew and Marc are visiting in this vicinity.

Congratulations to Kendra Sisson daughter of Russell and Doreen, and Craig Bain, son of Pat and Gerald, on winning most valuable player awards in high school sports.

Former resident Kay Barry has the same success gardening in Toronto as she used to have on Grass Lake. With tomato seeds that came from Italy, she nurtured the plants along indoors until she picked a ripe tomato on June 5. Six more are in evidence from the seeds sown in March.

Student-teacher life draws to its annual close this week with the public school graduation of Grade 8's at the Douglas Hodgson School on Friday afternoon and the high school commencement on Saturday evening at H.H.S.S.

I've been asked to find two volunteers to help at the School of Fine Arts Sale on Saturday, July 29, at the Douglas Hodgson School. Please give me a call if you can spare these few hours to help people find their way to the crafts and pictures they would like to buy on that day. It would be great to have a couple of couples volunteer. Quite often strong arms are needed for the transfer of heavier items. Volunteers may: sit at admissions desk, wrap purchases, direct viewers, assist at sales desk, or day on Canada's west coast. They are missed, and we wish them a safe trip home.

The Branch president had the honour of being a guest of the Ladies Auxiliary at their annual dinner catered by the Ladies of the Kilmount Legion. The meal was delicious, the Kilmount hospitality was excellent, and it was rewarding to see our ladies sitting down to a meal instead of preparing it.

Guests at the Presidents' Ball are asking for another one next year. For those who missed it, you will be able to dance to the Frank Howard band again on New Year's Eve. Details later.

Congratulations to our golf team who came fourth among twenty-five entries in Beaverton on Saturday.

A blood donor clinic will be held at the legion on July 11 at 2:00 PM.

The Ladies are holding another popular flea market this Saturday, June 24. They will be serving coffee, light lunch and will have a table of home baking. Local and out of town vendors will have a variety of tables.

The catering schedule continues to be heavy for the Ladies with their numbers of workers decreasing. On Thursday, they will cater a luncheon for the Senior Games group. A full house is expected.

answer questions in general about the sale. If you care to be on the team for that day, please call me at 754-2278 or Margit Moraal at 457-3395.

Congratulations to Cheryl Cooper for her part in the success of the West Guilford women's ball team. Her experienced and enthusiastic support in the sport she loves help keep it going strong from year to year.

Salad supper is on from 5-7 PM on Saturday at the Centre. Proceeds to St. Andrews' Church whose women are in charge

Mark Canada Day as a time not to cook

WILBERFORCE
by Marion Donovan

This week's column is not the easiest to produce as I have squashed my middle finger on my right hand and it is very difficult to type without it.

I have my typewriter set up at the window overlooking a hill which runs down to the lake. The iris and yellow lilies are all in bloom and the peonies are just about to burst their pods. It stormed about an hour ago and the whole sky is a torrent of clouds with the sun trying to shed its last rays before sinking for the night. This makes the colours of the flowers particularly clear and individual. God is in his Heaven, all's right with the world.

The annual Strawberry Supper held each year by the Wilberforce United Church Women will once again be held at the Lloyd Watson Centre on July 1. Between the hours of 5 PM to 7PM the buffet meal will consist of cold cuts, salads and much other good fare to be followed by the best strawberry shortcake every tasted. Admission is $7 per adult with half price for children and toddlers under five years free. Remember to mark July 1, on your calendar as no cook night.

The sympathy of the community is extended to Annie Rowley and family at the sad loss of Gilbert Rowley who died on Friday, June 16. Gilbert will be missed in particular by the Highland Grove Euchre Club of which Gilbert was one of the founders and played until his most recent illness.

Ida Holmes and Margery Peel teamed up in the Senior games Cribbage finals and placed second overall. Maurine Finlay and Eric Andrews placed third.

The Monday night euchre at Highland Grove saw Herb Moore and Kay Heaton winners with the highest score. Most lone hands were held by Doris Brown and Irwin Bowen. Low scores to Elaine Wright and Garf Hogan with the travelling prize to Isabel Ranson.

The Bridge score for Tuesday at Tory Hill was first place to Nick Lehoczy of Eagle Lake, second to Caroline Beard of Wilberforce, third to Vi Aikman of Haliburton and the consolation to Gwen Taylor of Gooderham.

CARNARVON

by Ann McKay

Congratulations to Dave and Mary Bell who became grandparents again on June 10. Son Darryl and his wife became first time parents when their son was born.

A very lovely wedding took place on Saturday when David, son of Mrs. and Mrs. Bill McKay, and Janet, daughter of Grace Lawson, were united in marriage at St. Peter's Anglican Church, Maple Lake. Four bridesmaids wore pretty off the shoulder designer gowns of white satin with a long train. The reception was at Wig-a-Mog Resort.

Jack Gregory is on the road to recovery following surgery at Sunny Brook Medical Centre. We were sorry to learn Jack Parker, Hazel's brother-in-law died last week. Our sympathies to Bertha and family.

Time off from city can hurt

DOWN OUR ROAD

removed the smaller stones to make room for this large one. Her skin was starting to dampen again. Lifting the large rock from the pile she turned, catching her knee on the shovel lying crosswise across the wheelbarrow. Out of her grip slid the rock, down onto her unprotected foot. She hadn't changed back into work clothes because she had supposedly been finished for the day. For a minute she thought she was going to faint. Stars exploded before her eyes then became streaks in the air as her head suddenly felt light and floating above her body. The momentary numbness in her foot soon gave way to terrible pain. She hobbled down to the river and stuck her foot into the cool water. This helped but not much. Slowly making her way back up the hill to her cottage, she decided to stay off the foot entirely and see how it was in the morning.

After a very rough night, during which she consumed almost a whole bottle of whisky in a vain effort to relieve the pain of her foot, she drove to the Minden hospital. Although she had done a tremendous lot of damage to her foot and one toe in particular, nothing was broken. But it meant the end of her work on the walkway for the rest of the summer.

By the end of the month she returned to Toronto with a tanned body and one white foot. It had been agreed that the following summer her brother-in-law would help her and together they would complete the "desire walkway". Her toe was still tender and swollen and she wore a running shoe, loosely laced on that foot. But it was improving day by day.

Two weeks after returning to the city she was coming home from work on the subway. It was rush hour and people were jammed in like berries in a bucket. The train lurched along its track, stopping and restarting at each station. As it pulled out from one stop it jerked especially hard and a large woman's high-heeled shoe ground into her still recovering foot. She thought she'd go clear through the roof.

Well, at least she had seven or eight months to recover before they started working on the walkway again. That should be enough time, she thought, limping off the train at her stop.

Highland dancers debut smashing performance for seniors

SENIOR LEAGUE

by Winnifred Barnum

Another week has passed and its Thursday again, time for our tea party. The ladies of the lawn bowlers in Minden supplied the tea party this week and Annie Schultz thanked them on behalf of the residents.

That evening bingo was called by Kinsman Doug Shipley with the help of his family. We sincerely thank him.

Ray and May Cameron and daughter Jackie Yatenan took me out for lunch since they were unable to be here on my birthday. We then went to Haliburton where we picked up Wilda La Rue and went to Pine Lake Cemetery, then to Eagle Lake, and visited Chantal Thurston, had dinner at the Kozy Korner and went to Wilda's for birthday cake.

Ruth and Jack Foster came Friday afternoon to entertain the residents with guitar music and singing. The residents enjoyed it immensely and thank them for coming.

Saturday Mrs. Oliver's two sons and daughter came to Hyland Crest to celebrate their birthday with their mother.

Alice Todd was invited to Mabel and Eldon Deacons to celebrate Barbara Todd's, Bert Yslinga's, and Doug Shipley's Birthday's. Fifteen sat down to dinner.

Mrs. Fay Aggett and her Hyland dancing class entertained us in the auditorium. They will be competing in the Hyland Games here in Haliburton this weekend. This was their first time to dance in front of an audience. Residents enjoyed the dancing very much.

Mrs. Oliver and her brother Bill Crather and his daughter Joyce to visit her last week.

Sunday afternoon a Hymn Sing was led by Larry Warburton from Haven of Rest.

Chapel service Sunday night was conducted by Rev. John Burgess and organist was Florence Robinson. In a previous news item I had Florence Johnson instead of Robinson; I am sorry about the mistake.

Pearl Lyle came home Sunday from having a nice week with her son Robert and his family.

Saturday night May Horsley attended the celebration of her daughter Marion and Lloyd Berry's 40th wedding anniversary in the Community Centre, in West Guilford.

Ina McGuire is home again from St. Joseph's Hospital in Peterborough.

Last Thursday Alice Todd had the misfortune to fall while down town Minden and broke her hand.

Doris and Linda took some of the residents for a bus trip to Dorset Tuesday afternoon. I could not go on the bus because I had an appointment with the dentist in Haliburton. Joan Sawyer drove me up and Terry drove me back home. I had dinner with Terry and Norma.

For sometime now some of the residents at Hyland Crest have been corresponding with pupils at Archie Stouffer's school in Bonnie Berry's class. The children have been anxious to see Hyland Crest. We decided to invite them here for a barbeque of hot dogs, hamburgs, ice cream and doughnuts Wednesday June 14, 1989. Since it was a dull day we had it in the auditorium. Mark Schell and his staff prepared the food in the kitchen and brought it to the auditorium. The residents and the pupils had written to sit together at tables. It was an enjoyable time. After lunch the children were divided into groups and were given a tour of the home. It was a worth-while project that was a benefit to the residents and the children.

Wednesday night Kathy Owens and Earle Cooper were here to entertain us with violin and piano. The residents really enjoyed their music. Thank you for coming so regularly.

TSW report ...

The lakes north east of Peterborough received a heavy rainfall the night of June 9-10, 1989 which gave their levels a boost. Surplus water was discharged beginning on the 10th from Trent-severn lakes in the Burnt, Mississauga, Eels and Jack watersheds. By June 16 many stoplogs have been replaced again with the affected levels now more manageable in the mid-90 percent range.

On Monday, June 12 the levels had averaged 99.9 percent on the reserve lakes which was about seven percent above the 10 year average and eight percent higher than in 1988.

COMMUNITY NEWS

Florence and Ray Parnell celebrated their 65th anniversary at the Harvest restaurant on June 14. The couple has been living in the area since 1966 when they retired. Twenty-eight people helped them celebrate.

Dorset residents gets to take part in SkyDome's opening ceremony

DORSET NEWS

by Phyllis Briscoe

The Dorset Senior Club is holding a Flea Market on the club grounds July 1 beginning at 9 A.M. There will also be a bake table inside the building.

The foot clinic will be held on Wednesday, June 21 at the Dorset School. Please call Haliburton, 457-1391 for an appointment.

We have a celebrity in our midst. Jack Roper, who resides at Raven Lake, was a member of the Chorus Line in the entertainment ceremonies at the opening of the Dome Stadium. One of Jack's sons, Chris, resides in Dorset; another son, Shane, is in school at Dwight. We haven't heard whether Jack go a soaking or not.

A number of Dorset seniors participated in the Muskoka Senior Games swimming event at Huntsville Centennial pool. It was fun and everyone enjoyed it. Most of the events were estimating your time for going a specified number of lengths of the pool. There were also some speed contests. Ann Bew and Paul Morley were the only ones who appeared on the award list. Paul won second on the 25 M. and 1st. on the 50 M. free style estimated time and Paul and Ann Bew came in 3rd. in the relay race. The also-rans enjoyed the swim. There were refreshments served after the event concluded. Debbie Deluch, with her associates did a fine job of organizing and managing the event.

I had my first ride on an A.T.V. three wheeler recently. It was quite an experience. I wouldn't wish to travel to Florida by that means of transportation, but one must try everything once.

HALIBURTON DISTRICT REAL ESTATE BOARD

DEFINITION OF A REAL ESTATE BOARD

"A real estate board is to the real estate profession what the bar association is to the lawyer and the medical association is to the doctor. It is the force for good. It is a force for the betterment of its practitioners and the public they serve. In such an association there are crystallized the rules of conduct, the codes and standards of self discipline which proclaim to the community the sense of integrity and the high qualities and ideas which you demand, and which characterize the service of men of good will engaged in an honourable profession."
